VERSEWISCONSIN

FOUNDED BY LINDA ASCHBRENNER AS FREE VERSE 1998

FEATURES

My Barefoot Rank by David Graham

Revising Your Poems by Michael Kriesel

Karla Huston Interviews Denise Duhamel

Poetry by Erum Ahmed 🞇 Idella Anacker 🞇 Antler 🞇 Christopher Austin 🏶 Suzanne Bergen 🏶 Gerald Bertsch 🏶 Amy Billone 🕷 David Blackey 🛞 John L. Campbell 🏶 Antonia Clark 🏶 Cathryn Cofell 🛞 Barb Cranford 🏶 CX DILLHUNT 🏶 DENISE DUHAMEL 🏶 P.R. DYJAK 🏶 R. VIRGIL ELLIS 🏶 Thomas J. Erickson 🏶 Casey Francis 🏶 Jim Giese 🏶 Sara Greenslit 🛞 John Grey 🛞 Kenneth P. Gurney 🛞 Richard Hedderman 🛞 Charles Hughes 🎇 Clint Jensen 🛞 Henk Joubert 🏶 Claire Keyes Jackie Langetieg 🏶 Estella Lauter 🏶 John Lehman 🏶 Quincy Lehr 🏶 David Lurie 🏶 Amit Majmudar 🏶 Jesse Manser 🏶 Linda Back McKay 🏶 Rick McMonagle 🞇 Mary Mercier 🎇 Richard Merelman 🎇 Richard Moyer 🏶 Normal 🏶 Maurice Oliver 🏶 Helen Padway Nancy Petulla 🛞 Charles Portolano 🛞 Ester Prudlo 🏶 Casey Quinn 🏶 Christine Redman-Waldeyer 🏶 James Reitter 🛞 Harlan Richards 🛞 Charles Ries 🛞 Marybeth RUA-LARSEN 🏶 CHUCK RYBAK 🏶 JANE SATTERFIELD 🏶 G. A. Scheinoha 🎇 Judith Sepsey 🛞 John Sime 🛞 Kate Sontag 🎇 BARRY SPACKS 🏶 MARC SWAN 🏶 RICHARD SWANSON 🏶 TIMOTHY Walsh 🛞 Marie Sheppard Williams 🛞 Marilyn Windau 🛞

"I think I became funny by mistake."

—Denise Duhamel

"The truth is that oblivion is not just commonplace for poets, but practically the rule. To harbor ambitions for any other fate is almost by definition to be deluded."

David Graham

"In my brain's basement, a reference librarian sits at a gray, metal, government desk. When I'm writing, she hands me whatever old image or line I need, when I need it. "

-Michael Kriesel

ANTLER		sential for writers in so many ways. We find a group of	Books Received Septem
MARY JO BALISTRERI	readers to give feedback on the early drafts. We seek out rea build friendships and support networks that cross vast dista		Publisher & author links available onlin
Michael Belongie Gerald Bertsch	our friends how they chose where to submit their work, and t	he majority of them responded that they look for venues	Elizabeth Alexander, Crave Radiance, New and
B.J. BEST	where they feel a connection—to the editor or the other po that neither of us would take on Verse Wisconsin alone—and	bets published. As editors, we're very aware of the fact	Selected Poems 1990-2010, Graywolf Press,
DAVID BLACKEY	be. Not only do we both read and discuss every single subm	ission we receive, we consult each other on almost every
JOAN ENGLISH	detail, right down to selecting the color for the cover of each		Elizabeth Austen, Andrea Bates, Carol Stevens Kaer & Sarah Suzor, Sightline , Toadlily
Jane Ewens K. P. Gurney	We like to think we also work with our contributors to bui	d relationshing that are magningful. We keep in touch	Press, 2010
CLAIRE KEYES	We like to think we also work with our contributors to bui sending out news and calling for submissions by email, writing the submission of the submission o	by personal notes as often as possible, suggesting changes	James Babbs, Another Beautiful Night, Lulu
Norman Leer	or offering encouragement as we respond to submissions,	and then making sure we give our writers a chance to	Publishing, 2010
RICHARD MOYER	comment or adjust the way their poems look on the page be	fore we go to publication.	James Babbs, things that aren't important happen
C.J. Muchhala Christina Norcross	We're also learning—and celebrating—the power of partne	rships on a larger scale. This year we've partnered with	all the time, Interior Noise Press, 2010
ANVIL O'MALLEY	Poetry Jumps Off the Shelf, a Madison-based program run	by poet Shoshauna Shy that puts poetry in surprising	Julie Carr, Sarah—Of Fragments and Lines,
Lov Roach	places in order to reach new audiences. Poetry Jumps Off	the Shelf partners with organizations around the state.	Coffee House Press, 2010 Rebecca Dunham , The Flight Cage , Tupelo Press,
JEAN C. Ross	You can learn more at www.poetryjumpsofftheshelf.com. Va around the theme "Luck of the Draw." Shoshauna read all th	rse Wisconsin and PJOS ran a joint call for submissions	2010
G.A. SCHEINOHA PETER SHERRILL	now fill the Verse-O-Matic poetry vending machine, each	folded into its little purple-topped capsule along with a	Thomas Sayers Ellis, Skin, Inc., Identity Repair
THOMAS R. SMITH	piece of candy and—if you're lucky—maybe a free year of V	erse Wisconsin. These Luck of the Draw poems comprise	Poems, Graywolf Press, 2010
LEN TEWS	our summer online poetry issue, and we're thankful to Shos o-Matic is making its way around to various businesses and		Miriam Hall, Dreams of Movement, Finishing
M. ROBERT WARDEN	happily on a table or countertop, and vends poems and can		Line Press, 2010 $\mathbf{D}$
Ed Werstein Marilyn Windau	or know someone who might be, contact us).		Derrick Harriell, Cotton, Willow Books/
WANLYN WINDAV	At Vana Wicconcin we look formend to more the	ith other organizations in the future This fill 211 h	Aquarius Press, 2010 Steve Healey, 10 Mississippi , Coffee House Press,
$100-499	At Verse Wisconsin, we look forward to more partnerships w working with the Wisconsin Fellowship of Poets, editing	their Wisconsin Poets' Calendar for 2013. Again, a	2010
CATHRYN COFELL	selection of the calendar poems will be featured at VWOnli		Tim Hunt, Fault Lines, The Backwaters Press,
MIKE KRIESEL Richard Swanson	is at www.wfop.org.		2010
JANET TALIAFERRO	To bring it back home we partner with each of you to mal	ke Verse Wisconsin a meaningful project. Without writers	Deborah Jackman-Wilson , Walking Between
TIMOTHY WALSH	sending us poems, book reviews, essays and more, there wou	Ild be no magazine at all. Just as important, though not	Raindrops , Xlibris, 2010 Gary Jackson , Missing You, Metropolis , Graywolf
MARY WEHNER	always stated, without readers, the magazine would be a futi of VW that arrive in your mailbox three times a year repres		Press, 2010 [Winner of the Cave Canem
$500-$1000	issue can contain: we're a community of readers and writers v		Poetry Prize]
$J00 $1000		hagazine, larger than any one of us, changes and evolves	Shane McCrae, In Canaan, Rescue Press, 2010
RICHARD ROE
Richard Roe Wisconsin Fellowship of Poet	over time. We both feel professed by moved by this truth	well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.	Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as	well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.	Ange Mlinko , Shoulder Season , Coffee House Press, 2010
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET VERSE WISCONSIN app	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription fo	well as—yes—lucky, to be involved. Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading below Lingering errors are of course the	Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010 Books Received January
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET √ERSE WISCONSIN app your local library, high scl	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as	well as—yes—lucky, to be involved. Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to	Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010 Books Received January
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET VERSE WISCONSIN app 70ur local library, high sch	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription fo	<ul> <li>well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.</li> <li>Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's</li> </ul>	Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010Books Received January Publisher & author links available online
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET /ERSE WISCONSIN app our local library, high sch p:	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription fo	<ul> <li>well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.</li> <li>Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at</li> </ul>	Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010Books Received January Publisher & author links available onlineSherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET VERSE WISCONSIN app our local library, high sch o:	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription fo nool, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like	<ul> <li>well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.</li> <li>Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/Issue105/poems105/</li> </ul>	Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010Books Received January Publisher & author links available online
VISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET VERSE WISCONSIN app Dur local library, high sch D: _ Subscribe (4 issues): ($2	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription fo nool, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like	<ul> <li>well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.</li> <li>Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at</li> </ul>	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> </ul>
VISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET VERSE WISCONSIN app Dur local library, high sch D: _ Subscribe (4 issues): ($2	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription fo nool, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like 25 regular, or $18 student) School:	<ul> <li>well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.</li> <li>Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/Issue105/poems105/</li> </ul>	Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House         Press, 2010         Books Received January         Publisher & author links available online         Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind         Publications, 2011         John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010         Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press,
VISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET VERSE WISCONSIN app our local library, high sch : Subscribe (4 issues): ($2 Give a gift subscription	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription fe nool, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like 25 regular, or $18 student) School:($25)Make a donation $	<ul> <li>well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.</li> <li>Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/Issue105/poems105/ hazelton.html.</li> <li>Contact us: editors@versewisconsin.org.</li> </ul>	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> </ul>
VISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET ERSE WISCONSIN app our local library, high sch : Subscribe (4 issues): ($2 Give a gift subscription	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as tears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for hool, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like 25 regular, or $18 student) School:($25)Make a donation $	<ul> <li>well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.</li> <li>Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/Issue105/poems105/ hazelton.html.</li> <li>Contact us: editors@versewisconsin.org.</li> <li>© Verse Wisconsin 2011</li> </ul>	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Eric Greinke, Traveling Music, Presa Press, 2011</li> </ul>
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET /ERSE WISCONSIN app our local library, high sch o: Subscribe (4 issues): ($2 Give a gift subscription Get on the email list for	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like 25 regular, or $18 student) School:($25)Make a donation $newsAdvertiseReview books	<ul> <li>well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.</li> <li>Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/Issue105/poems105/ hazelton.html.</li> <li>Contact us: editors@versewisconsin.org.</li> <li>© Verse Wisconsin 2011</li> </ul>	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Eric Greinke, Traveling Music, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Eric Greinke, The Potential of Poetry, Essays,</li> </ul>
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET /ERSE WISCONSIN app our local library, high sch Subscribe (4 issues): ($2 Give a gift subscription Get on the email list for	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as tears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for hool, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like 25 regular, or $18 student) School:($25)Make a donation $	<ul> <li>well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.</li> <li>Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/Issue105/poems105/ hazelton.html.</li> <li>Contact us: editors@versewisconsin.org.</li> <li>© Verse Wisconsin 2011</li> </ul>	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Eric Greinke, Thaveling Music, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Eric Greinke, The Potential of Poetry, Essays, Presa Press, 2011</li> </ul>
VISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET VERSE WISCONSIN app our local library, high sch  Subscribe (4 issues): ($2 Give a gift subscription Get on the email list for Volunteer (e.g., proofrea	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like 25 regular, or $18 student) School:($25)Make a donation $newsAdvertiseReview books	<ul> <li>well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.</li> <li>Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/lssue105/poems105/ hazelton.html.</li> <li>Contact us: editors@versewisconsin.org.</li> <li>© Verse Wisconsin 2011</li> <li>Co-Editors Sarah Busse</li> </ul>	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Eric Greinke, Thaveling Music, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Eric Greinke, The Potential of Poetry, Essays, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Maggie Jaffe, Flick(k)s, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> </ul>
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET VERSE WISCONSIN app Your local library, high sch o: Subscribe (4 issues): ($2 Give a gift subscription Get on the email list for Volunteer (e.g., proofrea Vame	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like 25 regular, or $18 student) School:($25)Make a donation $newsAdvertiseReview books	<ul> <li>well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.</li> <li>Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/Issue105/poems105/ hazelton.html.</li> <li>Contact us: editors@versewisconsin.org.</li> <li>© Verse Wisconsin 2011</li> </ul>	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Eric Greinke, Thaveling Music, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Eric Greinke, The Potential of Poetry, Essays, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Maggie Jaffe, Flick(k)s, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Daniel Khalastchi, Manoleria, Tupelo Press,</li> </ul>
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET VERSE WISCONSIN app our local library, high sch o: Subscribe (4 issues): ($2 Give a gift subscription Get on the email list for Volunteer (e.g., proofrea Vame	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as tears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for foool, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like 25 regular, or $18 student) School: ($25)Make a donation $ newsAdvertise Review books ding, mailing, distribution, fundraising, publicity)	<ul> <li>well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.</li> <li>Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/lssue105/poems105/ hazelton.html.</li> <li>Contact us: editors@versewisconsin.org.</li> <li>© Verse Wisconsin 2011</li> <li>Co-Editors Sarah Busse</li> </ul>	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Eric Greinke, Thaveling Music, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Eric Greinke, The Potential of Poetry, Essays, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Maggie Jaffe, Flick(k)s, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Daniel Khalastchi, Manoleria, Tupelo Press, 2011</li> </ul>
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET /ERSE WISCONSIN app our local library, high sch Subscribe (4 issues): ($2 Give a gift subscription Get on the email list for Volunteer (e.g., proofrea lame	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as tears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for foool, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like 25 regular, or $18 student) School: ($25)Make a donation $ newsAdvertise Review books ding, mailing, distribution, fundraising, publicity)	well as—yes—lucky, to be involved. Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/Issue105/poems105/ hazelton.html. Contact us: editors@versewisconsin.org. © Verse Wisconsin 2011 Co-Editors Sarah Busse Wendy Vardaman	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Eric Greinke, Thaveling Music, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Eric Greinke, The Potential of Poetry, Essays, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Maggie Jaffe, Flick(k)s, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Daniel Khalastchi, Manoleria, Tupelo Press, 2011</li> <li>Noelle Kocot, The Bigger World, Wave Books,</li> </ul>
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET /ERSE WISCONSIN app our local library, high sch - Subscribe (4 issues): ($2 - Give a gift subscription - Get on the email list for - Volunteer (e.g., proofrea lame ddress	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the proof of the ears tributer. The proof of the ears tributer is the proof of the ears tributer is the proof of the ears tributer. The proof of the ears tributer is the proof of the ears tributer is the proof of the ears tributer is the proof of the ears tributer. The proof of the ears tributer is tributeries. The proof is tributer is tributer is tributer is tributer i	<ul> <li>well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.</li> <li>Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/Issue105/poems105/hazelton.html.</li> <li>Contact us: editors@versewisconsin.org.</li> <li>© Verse Wisconsin 2011</li> <li>© Verse Wisconsin 2011</li> <li>Gota Busse Wendy Vardaman</li> <li>Advisory Board Linda Aschbrenner</li> </ul>	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Eric Greinke, Thaveling Music, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Eric Greinke, The Potential of Poetry, Essays, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Maggie Jaffe, Flick(k)s, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Daniel Khalastchi, Manoleria, Tupelo Press, 2011</li> <li>Noelle Kocot, The Bigger World, Wave Books, 2011</li> </ul>
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET /ERSE WISCONSIN app our local library, high sch 	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as tears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for foool, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like 25 regular, or $18 student) School: ($25)Make a donation $ newsAdvertise Review books ding, mailing, distribution, fundraising, publicity)	<ul> <li>well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.</li> <li>Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/Issue105/poems105/hazelton.html.</li> <li>Contact us: editors@versewisconsin.org.</li> <li>© Verse Wisconsin 2011</li> <li>© Verse Wisconsin 2011</li> <li>Gota Busse Wendy Vardaman</li> <li>Advisory Board Linda Aschbrenner</li> </ul>	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Eric Greinke, The Potential of Poetry, Essays, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Maggie Jaffe, Flick(k)s, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Daniel Khalastchi, Manoleria, Tupelo Press, 2011</li> <li>Noelle Kocot, The Bigger World, Wave Books, 2011</li> <li>James P. Lenfestey (ed.), Low Down and</li> </ul>
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET /ERSE WISCONSIN app our local library, high sch 	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as tears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription fer nool, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like 25 regular, or $18 student) School:	<ul> <li>well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.</li> <li>Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/Issue105/poems105/hazelton.html.</li> <li>Contact us: editors@versewisconsin.org.</li> <li>© Verse Wisconsin 2011</li> <li>© Verse Wisconsin 2011</li> <li>Co-Editors Sarah Busse Wendy Vardaman</li> <li>Advisory Board Linda Aschbrenner B. J. Best Cathryn Cofell</li> </ul>	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Eric Greinke, Thaveling Music, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Eric Greinke, The Potential of Poetry, Essays, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Maggie Jaffe, Flick(k)s, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Daniel Khalastchi, Manoleria, Tupelo Press, 2011</li> <li>Noelle Kocot, The Bigger World, Wave Books, 2011</li> </ul>
VISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET VERSE WISCONSIN app our local library, high sch  _ Subscribe (4 issues): ($2 _ Give a gift subscription _ Get on the email list for _ Volunteer (e.g., proofrea ame 	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the proof of the proof of the ears tributer. The proof of the ears tributer is the proof of the ears tributer is the proof of the ears tributer. The proof of the ears tributer is the proof of the ears tributer is the proof of the ears tributer is the proof of the ears tributer. The proof of the ears tributer is tributeries. The proof is tributer is tributer is tributer is tributer i	<ul> <li>well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.</li> <li>Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/Issue105/poems105/hazelton.html.</li> <li>Contact us: editors@versewisconsin.org.</li> <li>© Verse Wisconsin 2011</li> <li>© Verse Wisconsin 2011</li> <li>Goteditors Barah Busse Wendy Vardaman</li> <li>Advisory Board Linda Aschbrenner B. J. Best Cathryn Cofell Ron Czerwien</li> </ul>	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Eric Greinke, Thaveling Music, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Eric Greinke, The Potential of Poetry, Essays, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Maggie Jaffe, Flick(k)s, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Daniel Khalastchi, Manoleria, Tupelo Press, 2011</li> <li>Noelle Kocot, The Bigger World, Wave Books, 2011</li> <li>James P. Lenfestey (ed.), Low Down and Coming On: A Feast of Delicious and Dangerous Poems About Pigs, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> </ul>
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET /ERSE WISCONSIN app our local library, high sch 	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for nool, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like 25 regular, or $18 student) School:	well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.         Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/Issue105/poems105/hazelton.html.         Contact us: editors@versewisconsin.org.         © Verse Wisconsin 2011         Output         Output </td <td><ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Eric Greinke, Thaveling Music, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Eric Greinke, The Potential of Poetry, Essays, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Maggie Jaffe, Flick(k)s, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Daniel Khalastchi, Manoleria, Tupelo Press, 2011</li> <li>Noelle Kocot, The Bigger World, Wave Books, 2011</li> <li>James P. Lenfestey (ed.), Low Down and Coming On: A Feast of Delicious and Dangerous Poems About Pigs, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Christina Lloyd, Territories, Finishing Line</li> </ul></td>	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Eric Greinke, Thaveling Music, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Eric Greinke, The Potential of Poetry, Essays, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Maggie Jaffe, Flick(k)s, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Daniel Khalastchi, Manoleria, Tupelo Press, 2011</li> <li>Noelle Kocot, The Bigger World, Wave Books, 2011</li> <li>James P. Lenfestey (ed.), Low Down and Coming On: A Feast of Delicious and Dangerous Poems About Pigs, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Christina Lloyd, Territories, Finishing Line</li> </ul>
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET /ERSE WISCONSIN app our local library, high sch 	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the profound, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like 25 regular, or $18 student) School:	<ul> <li>well as—yes—lucky, to be involved.</li> <li>Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/Issue105/poems105/hazelton.html.</li> <li>Contact us: editors@versewisconsin.org/</li></ul>	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Eric Greinke, Thaveling Music, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Eric Greinke, The Potential of Poetry, Essays, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Maggie Jaffe, Flick(k)s, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Daniel Khalastchi, Manoleria, Tupelo Press, 2011</li> <li>Noelle Kocot, The Bigger World, Wave Books, 2011</li> <li>James P. Lenfestey (ed.), Low Down and Coming On: A Feast of Delicious and Dangerous Poems About Pigs, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Christina Lloyd, Territories, Finishing Line Press, 2011</li> </ul>
VISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET /ERSE WISCONSIN app pour local library, high sch 	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as the ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for the profound, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like 25 regular, or $18 student) School:	well as—yes—lucky, to be involved. Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/Issue105/poems105/ hazelton.html. Contact us: editors@versewisconsin.org. © Verse Wisconsin 2011 © Verse Wisconsin 2011 New Yardaman Advisory Board Linda Aschbrenner B. J. Best Cathryn Cofell Ron Czerwien Tom Erickson Fabu David Graham	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Eric Greinke, Thaveling Music, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Eric Greinke, The Potential of Poetry, Essays, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Maggie Jaffe, Flick(k)s, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Daniel Khalastchi, Manoleria, Tupelo Press, 2011</li> <li>Noelle Kocot, The Bigger World, Wave Books, 2011</li> <li>James P. Lenfestey (ed.), Low Down and Coming On: A Feast of Delicious and Dangerous Poems About Pigs, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Christina Lloyd, Territories, Finishing Line Press, 2011</li> <li>Dimitris Lyacos, trans. by Shorsha Sullivan,</li> </ul>
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET /ERSE WISCONSIN app our local library, high sch p: Subscribe (4 issues): ($2 Give a gift subscription Get on the email list for Volunteer (e.g., proofrea Vame  ddress City tate Zip  for Subscription: Renew /vERSE WISCONSIN	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as tears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription fer foool, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like 25 regular, or $18 student) School: ($25)Make a donation $ news Advertise Review books ding, mailing, distribution, fundraising, publicity) Email Phone and Phone Gift Subscription for a subscription with:	well as—yes—lucky, to be involved. Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/Issue105/poems105/ hazelton.html. Contact us: editors@versewisconsin.org. @ Verse Wisconsin 2011 Co-Editors Sarah Busse Wendy Vardaman Advisory Board Linda Aschbrenner B. J. Best Cathryn Cofell Ron Czerwien Tom Erickson Fabu David Graham Angela Rydell	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Eric Greinke, Thaveling Music, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Eric Greinke, The Potential of Poetry, Essays, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Maggie Jaffe, Flick(k)s, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Daniel Khalastchi, Manoleria, Tupelo Press, 2011</li> <li>Noelle Kocot, The Bigger World, Wave Books, 2011</li> <li>James P. Lenfestey (ed.), Low Down and Coming On: A Feast of Delicious and Dangerous Poems About Pigs, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Christina Lloyd, Territories, Finishing Line Press, 2011</li> </ul>
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET VERSE WISCONSIN app our local library, high sch o: Subscribe (4 issues): ($2 Give a gift subscription Get on the email list for Volunteer (e.g., proofrea Vame  volunteer (e.g., proofrea Vame  tate Zip  for Subscription:Renew Mail to (checks payable to V VERSE WISCONSIN P. O. Box 620216	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as tears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for foool, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like 25 regular, or $18 student) School:	well as—yes—lucky, to be involved. Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/Issue105/poems105/ hazelton.html. Contact us: editors@versewisconsin.org. © Verse Wisconsin 2011 © Verse Wisconsin 2011 New Yardaman Advisory Board Linda Aschbrenner B. J. Best Cathryn Cofell Ron Czerwien Tom Erickson Fabu David Graham	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Eric Greinke, Traveling Music, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Eric Greinke, The Potential of Poetry, Essays, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Maggie Jaffe, Flick(k)s, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Daniel Khalastchi, Manoleria, Tupelo Press, 2011</li> <li>Noelle Kocot, The Bigger World, Wave Books, 2011</li> <li>James P. Lenfestey (ed.), Low Down and Coming On: A Feast of Delicious and Dangerous Poems About Pigs, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Christina Lloyd, Territories, Finishing Line Press, 2011</li> <li>Dimitris Lyacos, trans. by Shorsha Sullivan, Poena Damni Z213: Exit, Shoestring Press, 2010</li> <li>Caryn Mirriam-Goldbert, Marilyn L. Taylor,</li> </ul>
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET ✓ERSE WISCONSIN app rour local library, high sch o: Subscribe (4 issues): ($2 Give a gift subscription Get on the email list for Volunteer (e.g., proofrea Name  Volunteer (e.g., proofrea Name  Volunteer Zip City Cor Subscription: Renew Mail to (checks payable to V VERSE WISCONSIN	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as tears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription for foool, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like 25 regular, or $18 student) School:	well as—yes—lucky, to be involved. Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/Issue105/poems105/ hazelton.html. Contact us: editors@versewisconsin.org. @ Verse Wisconsin 2011 Co-Editors Sarah Busse Wendy Vardaman Advisory Board Linda Aschbrenner B. J. Best Cathryn Cofell Ron Czerwien Tom Erickson Fabu David Graham Angela Rydell	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Eric Greinke, Traveling Music, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Eric Greinke, The Potential of Poetry, Essays, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Maggie Jaffe, Flick(k)s, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Daniel Khalastchi, Manoleria, Tupelo Press, 2011</li> <li>Noelle Kocot, The Bigger World, Wave Books, 2011</li> <li>James P. Lenfestey (ed.), Low Down and Coming On: A Feast of Delicious and Dangerous Poems About Pigs, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Christina Lloyd, Territories, Finishing Line Press, 2011</li> <li>Dimitris Lyacos, trans. by Shorsha Sullivan, Poena Damni Z213: Exit, Shoestring Press, 2010</li> <li>Caryn Mirriam-Goldbert, Marilyn L. Taylor, Denise Low, &amp; Walter Bargen, (eds.),</li> </ul>
WISCONSIN FELLOWSHIP OF POET VERSE WISCONSIN app your local library, high sch to: Subscribe (4 issues): ($2 Give a gift subscription Get on the email list for Volunteer (e.g., proofrea Name Address City State Zip For Subscription:Renew Mail to (checks payable to V VERSE WISCONSIN P. O. Box 620216	over time. We both feel profoundly moved by this truth, as ears tri-quarterly. Please consider a subscription fermool, senior center, or other institution. Yes! I'd like 25 regular, or $18 student) School:	well as—yes—lucky, to be involved. Thanks to Ramona Davis, Melissa Lindstrum, and Charles Rybak for volunteer proofreading help. Lingering errors are, of course, the responsibility of VW's editors, who would like to note this mistake in VW105: Rebecca Hazelton's poems were incorrectly formatted in the print magazine, but appear as they should online at http://versewisconsin.org/Issue105/poems105/ hazelton.html. Contact us: editors@versewisconsin.org. @ Verse Wisconsin 2011 Co-Editors Sarah Busse Wendy Vardaman Advisory Board Linda Aschbrenner B. J. Best Cathryn Cofell Ron Czerwien Tom Erickson Fabu David Graham Angela Rydell	<ul> <li>Ange Mlinko, Shoulder Season, Coffee House Press, 2010</li> <li>Books Received January Publisher &amp; author links available online</li> <li>Sherry Chandler, Weaving a New Eden, Wind Publications, 2011</li> <li>John Dubord, The Marvelous Mister Toad [children's book], Toadybooks Press, 2010</li> <li>Dave Etter, Dandelions, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Eric Greinke, Traveling Music, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Eric Greinke, The Potential of Poetry, Essays, Presa Press, 2011</li> <li>Maggie Jaffe, Flick(k)s, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Daniel Khalastchi, Manoleria, Tupelo Press, 2011</li> <li>Noelle Kocot, The Bigger World, Wave Books, 2011</li> <li>James P. Lenfestey (ed.), Low Down and Coming On: A Feast of Delicious and Dangerous Poems About Pigs, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010</li> <li>Christina Lloyd, Territories, Finishing Line Press, 2011</li> <li>Dimitris Lyacos, trans. by Shorsha Sullivan, Poena Damni Z213: Exit, Shoestring Press, 2010</li> <li>Caryn Mirriam-Goldbert, Marilyn L. Taylor,</li> </ul>

Constant Editors' Notes

THANKS TO THESE DONORS!

September-December 2010

ailable online

Berywn Moore, O Body Swayed, Cherry Grove Collections, 2010

Ralph Murre, The Price of Gravity, Auk Ward Editions, 2010

Charles Nevsimal (ed), Now Hear This: Voices of Urban Youth, Vol. Two, Centennial Press

(in cooperation with Lad Lake), 2010 Georgia Ressmeyer, Today I Threw My Watch

Away, Finishing Line Press, 2010

Liz Rhodebeck, What I Learned in Kansas, Port Yonder Press, 2010

W.R. Rodriguez, Concrete Pastures of the Beautiful Bronx, zeugpress, 2008

Lynn Shoemaker, A Catch in the Throat of Allah, Parallel Press, 2010

Robert Sonkowsky, Unsound Science, Xlibris,

Sandy Stark, Counting on Birds, Fireweed Press,

Alex Stolis, Li Po Comes to America, Parallel Press,

David Young, Field of Light and Shadow, Selected and New Poems, Alfred Knopf, 2010

Advertise in VW

(Single Issue Rates) Business card $35 1/4 page $75 1/2 page $125 Full page $200

January-April 2011

2010

2010

2010

2010

2007

Press, 2010

Press, 2010

[books], 2011

Richard W. Moyer, 58 Collected Poems, Infinity,

Richard W. Moyer, The Selected Poems, Infinity,

Andrea Potos (ed.), Love and Lust, an Anthology, Parallel Press, 2011 Edith Rylander, Dance with the Darker Sister, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010 Nic Sebastian, Forever Will End On Thursday, Lordly Dish Nanopress, 2011 Joyce Sutphen, First Words, Red Dragonfly

Lester Smith (ed.), The Hungry Dead, Popcorn

Paul Terranova, This Small Breathing Coincidence, Parallel Press, 2011 Tony Trigilio, Historic Diary, BlazeVOX

Marine Robert Warden, Beyond the Straits, Presa Press, 2010 Diana Woodcock, In the Shade of the Sidra Tree, Finishing Line Press, 2010 Timothy Young, Herds of Bears Surround Us, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010 Tracy S. Youngblom, Driving to Heaven, Parallel Press, 2010 Mishka Zakharin, The Spleen of Fiery Dragons,

Infinity Publishing, 2010

Submission guidelines can be found at versewisconsin.org. Please send us a review copy of your recently published book or chapbook! Join us on Facebook for announcements & news.

Books Reviewed Online

B.J. Best, Birds of Wisconsin, New Rivers Press, 2011 by Amanda Brzenk Sue Chenette, Slender Human Weight, Guernica Editions, 2009 by Lou Roach Karl Elder, The Houdini Monologues, Seems 43 – 44 / Word of Mouth Books 2010 by Michael Kriesel Joseph Farley, Looking for the Mother Tongue, March Street Press, 2010 by Karla Huston Ann Fisher-Wirth, Carta Marina, Wings Press, 2009 by Moira Richards Barbara L. Greenberg, Late Life Happiness, Parallel Press, 2010 by Lou Roach Miriam Hall, Dreams of Movement, Finishing Line Press, 2010 by Russell Gardner, Jr. Derrick Harriell, Cotton, Willow/Aquarius Books, 2010 by Sarah Busse Terrance Hayes, Lighthead, 2010 by Fabu James P. Lenfestey (ed.), Low Down and Coming On: A Feast of Delicious and Dangerous Poems About Pigs, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010 by Athena Kildegaard Dimitris Lyacos, trans. by Shorsha Sullivan, Poena Damni Z213: Exit, Shoestring Press, 2010, Two Reviews: by Manos Georginis and by Judith Swann Shane McCrae, In Canaan, Rescue Press, 2010 by Lisa Vihos Berwyn Moore, O Body Swayed, Cherry Grove Collections, 2009 by Sherry Chandler Cristina M.R. Norcross, Unsung Love Songs, 2009 by Kathleen Serley Alicia Suskin Ostriker, The Book of Seventy, University of Pittsburgh Press, 2009 by Moira Richards Stephen Roger Powers, The Follower's Tale, Salmon Poetry, 2009 by Russell Gardner, Jr. Liz Rhodebeck, What I Learned in Kansas, Port Yonder Press, 2010 by Elmae Passineau Thomas R. Smith, The Foot of the Rainbow, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010 by Ralph Murre Alex Stolis, Li Po Comes to America, Parallel Press, 2010 by Lisa Vihos Joyce Sutphen, First Words, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010 by Barbara Crooker Timothy Young, Herds of Bears Surround Us, Red Dragonfly Press, 2010 by Judith Swann

& Books Noted:

Bart Galle, Everything Is True at Once, 2009 by Phyllis Beckman; Kenneth P. Gurney, Fluid Shape of an Empty Womb, 2009 by Phyllis Beckman; Deborah Jackman-Wilson, Walking Between The Raindrops, Xlibris, 2010 by Phyllis Beckman; Richard Kovac, Untitled, Poems, PM Books, 2008 by Zara Raab; Mokasiya, The Shamans' Dream, 2010 by Phyllis Beckman; Georgia Ressmeyer, Today I Threw My Watch Away, Finishing Line Press, 2010 by Judith Swann; Robert Sonkowsky, Unsound Science, Xlibris, 2010 by Russell Gardner, Jr.; Diana Woodcock, In the Shade of the Sidra Tree, Finishing Line Press, 2010 by Judith Swann

What Becomes of the Deported?

I ask myself. Do they disperse like child-blown bubbles? Or linger beneath saguaros and deliquesce? Do their bones merge into the desert detritus?

I picture them as ghost choruses crossing undulating lines.

I doubt they huddle around Sonoran campfires and reminisce about butchered chickens in Iowa.

I suspect they languish in sun-baked shanties on rations of derision.

Or, incognito, in rank cantinas, over warm cerveza, do they slur stories of how cold they were up north?

-DAVID BLACKEY, LA CROSSE, WI

Confined ~

Why the white picket fence?

No bigger than half a parking space, within no-man's land.

What lies inside can no longer leave.

Is it to keep out those that want in?

Which, considering the weathered Gentile form found within and the grave locale across the solitude, would appear to be very few, if any at all.

-JIM GIESE, PLYMOUTH, WI

You Get Used To It

The hardest thing about death is the first night. After the first night you get used to it Like kids at summer camp homesick their first night Cry themselves to sleep but the next day Make new friends and get used to it And go swimming and canoeing and fishing and hiking And do beadwork and dress up like Indians and roast Marshmallows and wieners and sing songs round the campfire All the campers' and counselors' faces illuminated And at night the counselor who loves the campers Wanders the dark silent cabin with lit candle observing The dreamy faces of the sleeping campers And feels happy looking down at them and when camp ends and it's time to go home The youngsters don't want to go and cry saying goodbye to new friends they love They'll never see again and their favorite counselor hugs them close. You get used to being dead the same way. You get used to being dead forever and don't want to go home. Where you are is your home now forever although there's one thing you never forget Or you tell yourself you'll never forget as you forget it forever-Singing the old camp song round the campfire your arm round your best friend under the stars.

-ANTLER, MILWAUKEE, WI

Gatekeeper of the kingdom

As the gatekeeper of the kingdom I have always looked upon you as a giant Views a gnat there's nothing you can do I have told You we don't have vacancies this season try your luck In Hades there's plenty of room for your family and friends And it's free for the poor and needy like you free lodging free food

All you can eat

-Erum Ahmed, Karachi, Pakistan

What Boys Do

curling up inside an empty garbage can I rolled down the warm flowing hill jeans torn hair short wind-blown my gym shoes blue and gray thinking this is what boys do they tumble through summer green like babies in the hard dark spaces where rubbish was

-AMY BILLONE, KNOXVILLE, TN

The Evening of the Fourth of July 🔊

You think you're immune in this landscape: a nephew's backyard, burgers on the grill, amused children chasing the bubbles you fling into the air from your wand. You're so sure of yourself, on earth, on your feet.

Go ahead and play badminton with the little girls you call granddaughters, your son-in-law with his new titanium knee popping the birdie towards you. But please remember as you lie flat on your back, both wrists fractured in the attempt to break your fall that this is what you wanted: to feel more intensely alive, someone kneeling by your side urging you to inhale deeply, exhale slowly. Ice, you implore, bring more ice, the good earth cushioning your body.

-CLAIRE KEYES, MARBLEHEAD, MA visit VW Online for audio by this author

Coney Island Redux

Coney Island this drab summer day gives us slippery oysters to eat. We slide them down, then spit them back up. The ghost of The Steeple Chase hangs in the mist with screams from gleeful riders, jilted laughter, a ruckus of lights.

> Today the Ferris Wheel is still. A few lost people speak Russian near the shipwrecked hotdog stand. On washed up beaches tufts of children build sand castles.

> -SUZANNE BERGEN, MADISON, WI

Question for You

Don't, he shouted, please don't. The crayon made a crazy web of violet triangles and intersecting lines. Later I heard my mother on the telephone-She will be severely punished. I said I didn't know who did it-I never saw. At the roadside I pocketed lavender flowers and shoved them into sewers. For years, I pressed my confession into sandboxes, erased one letter at a time-I-d-i-d-i-t. Lake Michigan's shrinking mouth swallowed all my words-I-t-w-a-s-m-e. Everything I wore was purple. At twenty-two, I forgot how to speak. As soon as I got better, I admitted to my parents-I drew on Jason McClellan's wall. They had forgotten even who his family was. Now my favorite color is crimson, darker than fresh blood. I have no amethyst jewelry, only garnet. My clothes have turned bright scarlet. Still, look closer. I promise you'll find purple patterns where you least expect them-When my mind leaps and spills, drunken, wild; in every angle of my vision, letters hide–Huckleberries, wine–I tap them with my feet, dawn colored, queen colored, savage unholy designs. I hold my breath. I jump from trees. I tie my hair in jagged knots. Even if at first you can't detect my secret, look closer–In the mad sea foam, the wind-blown sand, my clean hands and ferocious, closing teeth. Do you see it?

-AMY BILLONE, KNOXVILLE, TN

Used Book

after Elizabeth Bishop

I bought a tremendous book and brought it home to bed, where, the day dead, I lay with my fingers unfolding the frayed corners of the cover. I will never let this book go. The body, blemished with stickers, wears rectangles and squares in all the colors of well-intentioned rainbows bleeding into broken covenant upon broken covenant. There is pain in peeling the vellow "used" from the length of spine, another green "used" under that, until Elizabeth Bishop appears at last, finally free to breathe in the beautiful oxygen. Merchants must be pulled from the cover with care-no rush, no tear. Half Price Books. Book Barn. University Books. A last sticker from a store I have never explored. With a pencil I erase the jot of a studentthese poems seeding his life for a syllabus week, meaning Tuesday and Thursdayclean the title page infested with tiny class notes. Then the archeology of cost, the legend of the cover price for her complete works-I paid fifty-five cents for what I would bail an ocean for. One dollar, then two dollars on smaller stickers like those found in grocery stores, which you must scrape from the skin section by tiny-pieced section. The stakes were higher in the past. Finally, its bandages shorn, I hold the cover to my cheek, mouth close enough to whisper "all better now." begin with the poem where floating lanterns filled with flame illuminate a pretty paradise before setting it ablaze.

-CHUCK RYBAK, ONEIDA, WI

My Barefoot Rank

by David Graham

—to the memory of Donald Sheehan

In college I took a course or two with the Poet in Residence on our campus, who happened to be Richard Eberhart. Though I was young and determinedly unimpressed by such matters, Eberhart came into my life trailing a rather impressive list of honors. He was a winner of most accolades the poetry establishment could bestow, including The Pulitzer Prize, The National Book Award, the Bollingen Prize, and a stint as national Poet Laureate and Consultant to the Librarian of Congress. He was a founding member of the renowned Poets' Theatre in Cambridge, Massachusetts. Scholarly books were written about his career. In his years as a professor he taught at many leading universities, including Columbia, Tufts, Brown, Swarthmore, Princeton, and finally Dartmouth. His poems appeared in every major anthology, where he was frequently featured as one of our chief poets of World War II. In fact, his poem "The Fury of Aerial Bombardment" was, even to my prematurely jaded undergraduate eyes, a pretty terrific accomplishment, along with The Groundhog," "The Cancer Cells," "Cover me over, clover," and others. In short, anyone who knew anything about the poetry scene knew and respected Eberhart.

Even better, to my way of thinking back then, Eberhart knew, or had met, everyone. I was not too cynical to enjoy sitting in his living room in one of his workshop sessions, where he would lean back in his chair, puff on his pipe, and recount firsthand anecdotes of everyone from Yeats and Dylan Thomas to Allen Ginsberg. We all knew, as well, that he had once been the teacher of the most famous poet of the era, Robert Lowell Moreover, he was reputed to be the first academic, establishment poet to take the Beat poets seriously, which was a further feather in his cap from my perspective.

He lived out his extremely long life (finally dying in 2005 at age 101) about as richly honored and respected as a poet can be.

But well before his death I realized that my famous former professor was not so famous anymore. It seems increasingly obvious that, despite his accomplishments and high reputation, lasting for decades, the poet

Richard Eberhart was one whose name really was writ in water. When my generation dies, I expect he'll turn permanently into a footnote, one of those minor figures showing up occasionally in the biographies of others, only noted in the most exhaustive critical histories of his era. Looking back, I realize that his brand of highly wrought Romantic formalism was passing out of fashion even as far back as the 1960s. A young poet today who took Eberhart as a model would be a curiosity at best. His handful of best known poems have gradually but relentlessly been vanishing from the main anthologies. He rarely appears on course syllabi or in anything but the most specialized journal articles anymore, and I can't recall the last time I heard his name mentioned at any gathering of poets. I seriously doubt there will be any more scholarly works about him to come. A mere half decade after his death, Eberhart essentially has no fame anymore.

So what happened? The short answer is that what happened to him is what will happen to every other poet now breathing, with so few and such unpredictable exceptions that it nearly doesn't matter. For a few decades Eberhart enjoyed an uncommon degree of renown, it's true, but quite rapidly the natural order of things re-established itself, so he has been, by and large, forgotten. The truth is that oblivion is not just commonplace for poets, but practically the rule. To harbor ambitions for any other fate is almost by definition to be deluded, and, as the example of Eberhart nicely illustrates, honors and attention during one's life are no guarantee of posthumous reputation.

Of course, the ambition to write a great poem is not the same thing as a desire to win the Pulitzer Prize. We all know that, or say that we do. Yet many of us devote enormous amounts of time, energy, and precious hope seeking honors, reputation, prestigious publications, and all the rest of those things that we know, or should know, will evaporate rapidly even if we are lucky enough to achieve them in our lifetimes. Much more likely we won't even reach a fraction of the renown of an Eberhart who, even at the peak of his career, was seldom spoken of in the same breath as a Yeats or Frost. And now isn't spoken of at all.

In 1862, an unknown and unpublished young New England poet publishing writer. (I put the term "career" in quotation marks because wrote to a prominent literary figure, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, I am well aware that I never have had, or will enjoy, anything close inquiring of this learned gentleman whether, as she put it, her to Eberhart's degree of reputation, despite publishing my work in a poems were "alive." Higginson's baffled condescension toward the variety of places for decades now.) In a sense I suppose I am trying unconventional poems of Emily Dickinson has made his name a to convince myself that my utter obscurity as a poet-my "failure" footnote of a less admirable kind. But to his credit, he did know that to achieve the fame I once yearned for in my deep heart's core—is she was a remarkable woman, even if he had no idea her fame as a poet a good thing, not just a realistic adjustment to the conditions that would one day eclipse that of every other prevail, but ultimately a healthy way to be.

single American poet who was considered great in 1862. He became a friend and What I am groping toward I have no advice to give or answers to pen pal, someone she playfully referred to as her teacher. You and I might fancy that we would not be so obtuse as to miss the patches of self-doubt and personal we'd be wrong. Smarter people than us considered her a minor oddball writer for her reputation slowly grew to be what it is today.

In one of their exchanges, Higginson "career" as a publishing writer. suggested, no doubt kindly and diplomatically, that Dickinson's work was not ready for publication. In her letter of reply she disavowed this was as much a matter of temperament and sloth as principle, at least in the beginning. I have often felt like the world's worst any ambition of that outward kind, focusing entirely on the inward ambition that any serious poet must cultivate: schmoozer and hustler, no doubt largely because it's distasteful to me. If on a given day I had to choose between promoting my career and I smile when you suggest that I delay "to publish," that being foreign promoting poetry, I more often chose the latter. Most days I focused to my thought as firmament to fin. on the work itself, forming and sticking to a daily writing regimen in fact, I haven't missed a day in nineteen years and counting.

If fame belonged to me, I could not escape her; if she did not, the longest day would pass me on the chase, and the approbation of my dog would forsake me then. My barefoot rank is better.

Some critics and biographers have assumed that Dickinson was being disingenuous, seeking advice from a leading literary light while pretending not to be interested in his help toward publication. I probably thought so, too, if I gave the matter any thought when starting out as a poet. But what if she meant what she wrote? What if, in fact, she really was inquiring of a well-known expert his opinion of the quality of her poems, without expectation of a "career" in the art or even publication? What if she just wanted an informed evaluation, or wished to reach out to a possibly kindred soul? We know from biographical research, reinforced by everything Dickinson wrote, that she was fully capable of fiercely held and against-the-grain opinions. Why must we suspect that she was necessarily, if secretly, eager for ordinary publication? As far as we know, she never made the slightest move in this direction, and the handful of poems that appeared in print during her lifetime were submitted by friends. There is a great deal of speculation among Dickinson scholars, but to my knowledge there is not much evidence that she was ever unhappy with her barefoot ranking.

More importantly, what if she not only meant what she wrote, but what if she was right? Is there a sense in which a "barefoot" ranking is, actually, better than fame and a public career in the art of poetry? Well, of course it depends on what one means by "better." What I am groping toward here, tentatively and with many patches of selfdoubt and personal bewilderment, is a stance toward poetic vocation different from the more or less conventional ambitions that guided me through college, graduate school, and my early "career" as a

here, tentatively and with many poetic vocation different from the graduate school, and my early the big questions. But I can offer some testimony from my own experience in this strange enterprise. In my writing life, as true genius of an Emily Dickinson, but bewilderment, is a stance toward the years passed and it gradually became obvious that the prize committees were never going to give me a call, the major decades, until in the twentieth century more or less conventional ambitions critics would not be gushing about my that guided me through college, work, and my face would never appear on the cover of American Poetry Review, I reacted by gradually cutting back on my attempts to gain publication, win prizes, and generally push myself forward in the maelstrom of Po-Biz. To be honest

> At the same time I also resolved to do more of what Dickinson had done, reaching out to like-minded souls in a variety of ways. Unlike Dickinson, I was fairly sociable about it, comfortable enough leaving my house to meet other poets. I went to writers' conferences, became active in online discussion groups, and attended as many readings and open mics as I could. I participated in informal workshops both online and in person, wrote fan letters to poets I admired, did a bit of book reviewing Late in life and essay writing, connected with other writers on Facebook, and so forth. I met more than a few fellow poets online, and maintain a friendly correspondence with a fair number of them. Few of these were new activities for me, of course; what was different was that more and more I put the energy and time I used to devote to submitting work and promoting myself nto more "barefoot" or grassroots action. I happily submitted my

She saw it had been pointless to try to direct her tricycle, or her pet hamster. or her skis on the expert slope, or the varsity tackle who saw her in such a rosy light that she married him; which editor would select her work. or which of her thoughts her best friend would finish this time. . . and later still she eased up striving at all. She unbuckled, unlaced, leaned back and let it flow. -BARB CRANFORD, HANCOCK, WI own work for publication when solicited, but not often otherwise. When I published something new it felt good, naturally, but it didn't feel as though I had "won" anything. This seemed a fair price for not feeling like a loser when rejected or ignored.

Interestingly enough, this laissez-faire attitude toward the outward rewards of Po-Biz has had unexpected side benefits. For one thing, I found myself being solicited more frequently than ever before, probably because of all my online visibility. I haven't published more than before, necessarily, but I certainly have been rejected less often. For another thing, I gradually widened my circle of poetry pals and acquaintances considerably, and thus found my taste and knowledge in poetry also evolving accordingly. But most of all, I grew happier and happier as both poet and person. I discovered the old demons of envy and unhealthy, unrealistic ambition becoming weaker and weaker in me year by year. I am more content with my barefoot rank than I ever was while running hard on ambition's treadmill. It's not been a smooth road, I should add. Nor do I imagine I will ever achieve the perfect writerly bliss of non-ambition. As Donald Hall once noted in an essay, "nothing is learned once that does not need learning again"—nothing important, anyway, I believe. The old corrosive and envy-laden sense of ambition does appear in my soul on a regular basis, despite my best intentions. But I know what to do about it, at least. I send a poem I love to some friends. I attend an open mic and recite a poem by someone else. Every year I introduce my students to great poets of the past and cheer them in their own attempts to master the art. I swap new drafts with fellow poets. I write an essay like this one when asked, and hope in return to receive some comments, not from posterity but from you, Gentle Reader. I re-read Emily Dickinson and Walt Whitman as needed, and remind myself how delicious it can feel to walk barefoot through this world.

Visit VW Online to read more articles you won't want to miss including...

Jessica Nelson North: Recalling the Reaches of Silence & Sound

by LaMoine MacLaughlin

Rascal a classic. He also wrote other books which have delighted readers everywhere-and justly so. His hometown of Edgerton, Wisconsin annually celebrates the Sterling North Book Fair and Film Festival, gathering authors and fans from far and wide in his honor. His family home in Edgerton (the setting of Rascal), now open as a museum, has been restored to its 1917 setting. One of the major characters in Rascal is Sterling's older sister Jessica, portrayed when she was twenty-five years old. A couple of years ago I asked one of the Edgerton promoters of the Sterling North celebration about Jessica Nelson North, and the person did not know that Sterling even had a sister. Sterling's daughter Arielle, also an author, has remembered Jessica as "...my favorite aunt, enthusiastic and very bright. I can remember her reciting (by heart) reams and reams of poetry, old and new, even into her nineties. She wrote fine poetry herself, for a broad audience from small children to thoughtful adults. She was like a second mother to my dad, Sterling North, ...and he adored her. As adults, they had lively discussions about the literary world, agreeing or disagreeing about various authors and literary styles. Both were so knowledgeable and quick witted, it was fun listening to them." While Sterling North's work completely justifies his popularity, it has completely and unjustly eclipsed the achievement of his sister, Jessica Nelson North.

Jessica Nelson North, born in Madison, Wisconsin in 1891, grew up on the shore of picturesque Lake Koshkonong. Her father, David Willard North, farmed with his wife, Sarah Elizabeth (Nelson) North, near Edgerton. Sarah died while Sterling was very young, and he survived polio in his teens under the care of his sister Jessica. Lucy M. Freibert, a Women's Studies pioneer at the University of Louisville, has described Jessica Nelson North as "a precocious child (who) memorized and recited poetry from the time she could speak. By the age of five, she read the newspaper and composed rhymes...(and) in

Among children's literature, everyone considers Sterling North's Rascal a classic. He also wrote other books which have delighted readers everywhere–and justly so. His hometown of Edgerton, Wisconsin annually celebrates the Sterling North Book Fair and Film Festival, gathering authors and fans from far and wide in his honor. His family home in Edgerton (the setting of Rascal), now open as a museum, has been restored to its 1917 setting. One of the major characters in Rascal is Sterling's older sister Jessica, portrayed when she was twenty-five years old. A couple of years ago I asked one of the Edgerton promoters of the Sterling North celebration about Jessica

Why Being an Obscure Poet Isn't Such a Bad Life After All by Charles P. Ries

I awoke at midnight in a confused sweat. Racked again by a poet's ultimate existential dilemma; no, not a new and more powerful metaphor, but is it better to be a famous poet or an obscure poet? Some would argue this is actually a distinction without a difference, but not me. It was a choice. I would make it. It would become my self-delusional, self-fulfilling prophecy.

With only the neon light of Ray's Romper Room Bar across the street to illuminate my garret, my poet's soul screamed, "What is it you want for me–fame or obscurity?" Much to my amazement a clear voice responded, "Are you nuts! Obscure baby–be obscure!" The clarity of this audio hallucination gave me pause. I pray for all kinds of things and God never replies, but now, to this simple request, I get a voice in the dimness of night. It made me wonder if God was a frustrated poet? ...

Read the complete articles at VW Online.

Picasso's Studio

At the daycare, pigs with distorted faces line the walls, spiders appear like black suns, pumpkins whose grins happen upon the face any which way have been taken down, replaced with turkeys whose legs grow from their heads.

At the daycare, toddler's portraits are snapped into place by laundry pins on a line as if to dry, are circles, a doodling of self-examination.

Walking the halls of this studio, I nod at nonsense, nod at numbers, nod at need.

-Christine Redman-Waldeyer, Manasquan, NJ

Night Vision, 1968

That summer, back from Vietnam, Gene bossed Our crew, part-timers still in high school. We'd Wait in the seedy balcony–legs crossed, Slouched deep in red plush seats—for him to end The evening's show, turn up the lights to send A blinking audience home, and then proceed To point us to our putty knives and paint. "How come you never talk?" Long afterward, Told of his suicide, I glimpsed the ice His eyes became, how differently the dice Can roll. It wasn't—isn't—true: I've heard Repeatedly his measured, soft complaint. Last credits scrolled off-screen, the house again Dark, bathed in night, he counts slowly to ten.

-CHARLES HUGHES, PARK RIDGE, IL

Upon Finding a Nude of My Grandmother

Thirst was something my grandfather knew when he took charcoal, pressed it to paper, forgave Gladys, himself– left art school to marry her, dragged the lead over and over, broke the points on his pencils to know her on paper.

-Christine Redman-Waldeyer, Manasquan, NJ

My Mother Looked at Photographs

My mother looked at photographs. That's how I knew Aunt Emma smiled And Uncle Jim had been a child Who'd take big chances just for laughs—

At ten, he posed, all nonchalance, On the garage, umbrella raised ("To balance"—she'd remain unfazed— "He's an accountant, it's what he wants");

> How I found out life has its hells Even for grandfathers—white hair, Thin metal glasses, debonair In paisley tie and wide lapels,

Mine dressed his up in "confident clothes" (Which hadn't kept her from seeing through). I'd search her eyes, as children do, For signs of how deep down grief goes.

> This was especially true when she'd Hit Edythe. Then her voice would fall For emphasis: "We had a ball." More friends than sisters, they'd agreed,

But all those times, she didn't cry. She talked. She touched that teenage face. A discipline, I guess. A grace. Some deaths are hard to satisfy.

-CHARLES HUGHES, PARK RIDGE, IL

Depression

One day we were down-this is true, I am not making this up for the story's sake, or for pity's saketo our last potato. Standing in the kitchen, my mother held that spud up, and we all looked at it like Christ might have looked at those measly loaves and fishes. How could a woman feed a family of five on one potato? We were sent out, the three of us, to forage-for dandelion greens maybe, or to beg a lettuce head or a carrot grown by Mr. Dow down the street. My brother Earl, six years old then, came running back into the house waving a five-dollar bill over his head. He'd found it on the sidewalk. My mother made us all kneel down on the kitchen floor and thank God for the miracle.

Another day my baby brother Donny came up from the basement, covered with coal dust and cobwebs, his eyes shining. He put a glass button into my mother's hand. I found a diamond, Mama. he said. We don't ever have to be poor again.

> Donny's a grown man now, and rich. He still fixes his own cars, though he hates doing it. His wife says he doesn't understand that he has money. And Earl can make a dollar go farther than anyone else I know.

> > Me? I admit I pinch pennies. Save string. Recycle. Scrimp. Then save some more. Look every gift horse in the mouth for resale possibilities. But > > > also

I see miracles lying on the sidewalk, jewels in glass.

-MARIE SHEPPARD WILLIAMS, MINNEAPOLIS, MN

Memories of Cousin Stanley

My novelist cousin Stanley died of MS, contracted late in life, leaving me with regrets, for we'd had a "somewhat competitive relationship" (so Harry his friend had summed it up the time we drove, all three eighteen, out of Chicago to Canada).

The revealing bit about me and Stanley comes from this trip, not from his visit with Joan his wife to us in England, he reading at length from his first, best novel: "The lock...the lock was in my hands!"

But that time, too, is part of the story, for when he'd finished, flushed, I gave him only a nod. "Got it," I said: "The lock...the lock was in your hands."

More than "somewhat competitive."

I took him out through the rain that evening to tour the Cambridge Colleges; he had to see this stuff, I insisted. He might have preferred reading more of his novel.

Once, at a party in Cambridge, Mass., he asked how I'd liked his 5th and I said I'd wait for the paperback. Not nice. Not cousinly.

Driving Wisconsin, Harry grew tired of our bickering, proposed a contest: we'd fight it out, the first exhausted from non-stop-talking the loser. He must have figured our babble would keep him awake down the moonless highway. And so we talked, on and on, me and Stanley, miles and miles. Who knows what we said. Words. Kindly Harry declared it a tie.

Later, afflicted, Stanley labored with canes, a wheelchair, before he died. I sent a sympathy letter to Joan, but truly we'd failed to love one another as cousins should, as all of us should.

Sad. What else? When my friend Kirk had need of a name for his new punk band I suggested "Cousin Stanley," and so it was called. Stanley would have been pleased

Shelves

Today, I put in shelves and barely thought of anything but books and compact discs, of space and symmetry and all the things I hadn't read or listened to in years.

I still haven't. I like to know they're there, not just in memory, but in my hall and living room, like reunited teams posed for a photograph, in which each face will show up elsewhere in a different snap, a part of a collection, but itself if moved or lost. Rearrangement's glib just custody. Each story stays the same.

-QUINCY LEHR, BROOKLYN, NY

Mouras Encantadas 🔊

No man would have her was the family joke as Great Aunt Alice sat and scowled. She'd forge a smile to criticize: The vinho d`alhos? Too strong! When eyeballs rolled, she'd soon invoke her chicken-less plight, how she'd been forced to kill their hens for lunch, to chop off heads and pluck and gut, and then she'd watched her father suck the bones – and ate no more. She'd lost her will until my brother's wake. She walked the long condolence line to slap my mother's face: Get over it, she said, then tottered from our reach to sit. She hummed a cradlesong while pulling out her hook and tatting case, then waited for the piercing that would not come.

-MARYBETH RUA-LARSEN, SOMERSET, MA

to lend his name to a punk garage band out of Meadville, PA. And in my own writings sometimes I'd name a character "Stanley," give him a walk-on part. But mainly I wanted to tell how we yakked on that trip word after rapid meaningless word unlistening to each other down the miles of the dark Wisconsin night.

-BARRY SPACKS, SANTA BARBARA, CA

1957

Back in 1957 my major concern was my sex life while in Tulsa, Oklahoma, they buried a time-capsule not to be opened till fifty years later, containing choice items including a new Chevy Belvedere with gasoline supplied in case that fuel might no longer be known in our world when they dug the car up in 2007, > the Chevy having no need for fuel, destroyed by water seepage. That fall a Yankee rookie named Kubek twice hit homers, third game of the World Series, Kubek named Rookie of the Year, and lest we forget, on Oct.4th the Soviets scared us by launching Sputnik, starting an overdrive of strive that continues to this very day.

Albert Camus won the Nobel Prize, Liz Taylor exchanged one marriage for another; a brave little black girl and eight of her friends > faced down bigots in Little Rock, and Mario A. Gianini died (inventor of the maraschino cherry).

I noted such matters in '57, like everyone else opined, even marched, but really my prime concern was my sex life, > should I be ashamed of that? -- not Sputnik, Kubek, the Nobel prize, not Liz nor the Chevy Belvedere.

-BARRY SPACKS, SANTA BARBARA, CA

Not Kansas

Circa 1969

My 1956 Mercury was not much of a car, Bought in Chico, California for $75 By a 15-year-old runaway, It took me down the coast 'Til drowsiness led me to A closed gas station where My sleep was interrupted by A zealous county sheriff's deputy. Busted on weapons charges, lying My ass off, no one to tell them Who I really was, or that I was Only 15 and far from home. My Mercury faithfully waited the 15 days It took me to serve my sentence For the knife, the chain, my smart mouth. Back on the road south, always south, To beautiful Fresno and my Jehovah Witnessing cousins, where I hid out Until my father, fearful I'd be converted, Flew out and dragged me back to Face the destiny I tried so hard to escape. Decades later, over half my life in prison, I still remember my 1956 Mercury and the 15 year old runaway who couldn't get away.

-HARLAN RICHARDS, GORDON, WI

Old Address 🔨

My address book is the crossed out numbers of my life. Where my kids have lived. Old girl friends, places I worked where I needed to connect, and sometimes did. My parent's birth dates, along with others, are jotted in the back. They moved to Chicago in 1919. My mom with her mother and sisters, my father alone. I call their old telephone number and wait. I picture an ancient, dial-up phone on a party line, mother saying aloud, "My, my, now who can that be?" But the woman who answers is younger. It's 1941 and I have just been born. "Is this really you?" she asks, "Is this mv son?"

-JOHN LEHMAN, ROCKDALE, WI

Move backwards, through the pane of glass. If the glass scratches or cuts you, > it will be healed on the other side. None of this has happened yet.

The split tomato drips its life's blood. Weeds thrive with wicked abandon.

Wrinkled-faced apples rot sweetly. The potent herbs are dried and aged.

After you have eaten all this, step up through the glass again.

You have no home. There is nowhere to live except within your skin.

-LINDA BACK MCKAY, MINNEAPOLIS, MN

Cm The Runaway

Strapped sublimely at the teat of God, bringing it out warm and whole, wet molecules of ecstatic precision-I swaddled emptily, sky-naked, beneath the shocked wood of the barn decked out in disrepair, where the threshing floor of my brains directed me to abandon my family and run off.

And the course of nations lumbers where it will, and the lives of bullet-ploughed men line up in the press-fresh shimmer of the Brand New Testament, slouching bland and googly-eyed toward the worldyet none of this concerns me in the least, who dirtied my ephemera with hay-dust, and slung and slashed in God's shallow puddles until a thousand mothers' voices announced warm pies and woven blankets, for my piddled cry.

All of these were the chalkboard visions strung across my sight, like a child's click-clack eye-toy, grudging my view of the world of itself, leavening the white sheet of my soul to pound in secret on its useless board.

-DAVID LURIE, MILWAUKEE, WI

A Summer Evening Walk

I walk my grandpa's dog in the middle of dormant Main Street, fluorescent lights glare out from a storefront, a stubborn orange sky is stubbornly setting. Two cars sit parked on the heaving brick road–client and beautician, engulfed in the stern light, are framed by the window announcing,

Linda's Shear Impressions 402-687-2267

Wrapped in a black cape, Sandy meets Linda's eyes in the mirror until a good piece of gossip prompts Sandy to shift her shoulders, turn her head, to look back and up as if the reflection hides some portion of the story. The dog tugs west away from the two ladies in the window, but know (because Linda cannot say no) we will see her late night show again this evening with another guest sitting in the chair, sharing from their life or their children's lives or their neighbor's.

I can only see August-rain, corn, heat. Stars have risen by the time the dog pulls back east under the streetlight's orange glow. The sky now black, the First National sign flashes in red lights:

9:47 87° then does it again 9:48 87° and 9:49 87° and 9:50 86°.

A Mercury Grand Marquis glides past with its low tires humming on the street until it slows where the Main Street brick ends and becomes the shoulderless blacktop leading away from town. The car creaks, the steering wheel whines, then heads back up the street to park in front of Linda's window. A question mark emerges slowly from the car as Linda opens the door, back straight and tall. followed by Sandy in the cape. The question mark navigates the curb with the help of an exclamation point and a billowing black cloud. All three figures wave and pause when the dog barks. We walk up to hear the exclamation point explain to the cloud, then louder for the question mark, "That's Gordon's grandboy, back probably for just the summer."

-CASEY FRANCIS, QUINCY, IL

Moving Back Home

I rang New York second. She wasn't sufficiently enough outdoorsy, but after California flat out told me no I had to try.

> I couldn't believe the pinch I was in-Florida was busy and a flake anyway. Jersey, well, I didn't want anyone I couldn't tell mom about.

So I dialed her up, despite saying I never would, never could after she smothered me, but there she was.

A little older, more stout and plain than I remember, but there she was, Midwest-willing to remember when I was there, ignoring when I left.

-CASEY FRANCIS, QUINCY, IL

Illinois Summer

Twilight fell and skinned its knee and Delphi brought it inside to the medicine cabinet and taped an antiseptic gauze on the wound and the blood turned the white gauze a wonderful pink tint with hints of blue-grey and peach.

-KENNETH P. GURNEY, ALBUQUERQUE, NM

By the Numbers

Dear Tom,

You were already gone when I got there, 11/14/06, Room 114, I sat with you till 4:11 pm CST, Central Shiva Time.

The same numbers pile up, some unexplained order from the untangling of your life, second by second, thread by thread.

Your number is up, when it's up, 1's and 4's a chugging train, rolling boxcars, cat's eyes.

The roll of the dice— One is a die Two is a dice Four is a life a fortification of family, friends, food, fun, a diehard delicious dance of destiny, good odds for everything.

-RICK MCMONAGLE, EUGENE, OR

Wire-To-Wire

You'd scan the text on yellow paper, the vital wire that a boy from Western Union delivered. Uncle Vic would promise a platinum Bulova for graduation. Perhaps there'd be a late acceptance from the rare school that didn't think you stupid. You've even kept the ones you'd rather forget: Vic dead STOP Come now STOP Funeral in Ramapo STOP

He loved you STOP Fifty years, and wires are rubberized. These are the lines that bind or dribble from breast pockets to set the user twittering. After your visiting son Googles a virtual friend you face him nose to nose, hear his stomach gurgle. You notice his new mole, muss his graying hair, inhale the onions and peppers from his fajita lunch, remind him to suck mints.

-RICHARD MERELMAN, MADISON, WI

Present Perfect

Edmund sprinkled the twenty-third psalm on his eggs and hash browns at the greasy spoon whose front door resides not ten feet from the bus stop.

He spreads Isaiah forty-thirty-one on his toast and knows Matthew twenty-two thirty-seven to thirty-nine are encapsulated in the vitamins he swallows with his orange juice.

Edmund feels ready to face the world now that his fortified breakfast is completely consumed and energizes his heart and body, so he stands at the bus stop newspaper under his arm, briefcase in hand.

That night, after supper, Edmund rereads the Song of Solomon in Lisa's lithe fingers and the kisses they share.

-KENNETH P. GURNEY, ALBUQUERQUE, NM

GoFigure 🔨

The moon is cut in half. Zero stars. My headlights cover 75% of the wide road until I right angle onto my street and they spill 10% into the drain gullies on either side. My garage door takes 30% longer to rise on cold nights. The mail box squeaks a loud 95% protest as it is opened and I pull out 75% ads and 25% bills which add up to a 100% disappointment. Dinner costs 10% of my week's budget but there is only 25% of the week left so I am ok. The play was not 100% perfect but it was good enough for me to get my money's worth. So I figure I am on the plus side for the evening.

-HELEN PADWAY, MILWAUKEE, WI

-BARB CRANFORD, HANCOCK, WI

Good-bye, 1935

I sit straight, eyes ahead, hands folded,

wishing I were somewhere else;

around and around its slow circle.

maybe out on the playground,

pushing the merry-go-round

Miss Groethe calls our names:

"Robert." The boy next to me,

who has been Bobby all week,

steps to the front of the room.

as Miss Groethe leans to each child,

"Good-bye, Robert. Good-bye, John.

Good-bye, Nina. Good-bye, Barbara.

We line up, march forward

scans each face intently.

Good-bye. Good-bye."

Suddenly I am afraid.

in a first grade classroom,

Bobby drops his pencil;

Dimly I understand that the world has changed.

But what have I done?

Nina sniffles. We march out.

I am not a child safe

but . . . what?

Her gray eyes are very bright.

For a long time the clock ticks.

Once Upon a Dime

A new eatery called La Croissant opened up, the owner, a tall, dark Turk, runs the place, coffee served in cups on saucers, every hot refill poured as though it's his blood.

My wife took me there, a women's hang out, elegant ambiance, gossip floating like dust motes-- where I wanted to say to my wife--tell me, is your old man out on bail yet?

His morning Happy Hour features dollar-a-cup-coffee, nothing terrific for geezers like me, who recall when a dime bought coffee with free refills and no added sales tax.

Forget this dollar-a-cup cookie shop, give me Gyros West, the din of early blue-collar crowds, where coffee mugs are always full, where you can relax among folks with mud on their shoes.

I miss mornings with my old writing pal, whose critiques began by asking, what the hell is this story about, amidst the wiggle-jiggle of tattooed waitresses, and clinky clatter of heavy plates, where kitchen aromas are a mix of bacon and eggs, biscuits 'n gravy, wafting the air with greasy vapors, orders shouted in Greek and Spanish, yesterday's stains on today's aprons.

-JOHN L. CAMPBELL, BROOKFIELD, WI

A Father's Regret

While we scuba dive on a coral reef five miles out in the Gulf of Mexico, a jelly fish, like a gigantic, unrolled condom, attaches itself to my son's shaved head. Damn, I never got to do shit like this with my dad.

-JOHN LEHMAN, ROCKDALE, WI

The Killers

The killers come and go. The victims (the alleged victims) blend together. Almost always black males either in or on the periphery of drug dealing.

I write my client's name on the file in black marker. read the complaint, go to the jail, look over the police reports, try to get him out on bail, plea bargain, or go to trial. At sentencing, the victim's family crying the same things over and over---He is missed. He was loved. He loved.

The killers come and go. So do the rapists, the armed robbers, and the burglars. But the child molesters. I remember them all. How they look into my eyes out of some dark animal terror; how the creepy fidgeting accompanies every lie; how the reverie of their terrible pleasures turns a scowl into a smile on a dime.

How the steel doors, the electric locks, the barbed wire hold us. bind us.

-THOMAS J. ERICKSON, MILWAUKEE, WI

No One Ever Asked Me...

... a decorated Vietnam vet, if I killed anyone. Not my son, my dad, my grandkids nor my wife. My answer is Steven Craven, an Army sergeant.

Of an almost three-hundred battalion men, he's the one who didn't return. I had asked for volunteers to build a school. His rifle rested against a tree when he was shot. But you are not responsible for that, you might object. And I'd look you in the eye and say, Oh yes we are.

Wondering After Carmen

Past the ball field behind Nana's, on the hill by the airport fence, we find a mini shrine:

a rock painted Carmen, a photo of an old woman holding a hairless dog. Dead dog?

Dead mom? A Happy Mother's Day balloon, nearly dead, creeps us out cold so we run like the devil is chasing us, last one home a dead Chihuahua.

Porch safe, we wonder Carmen's death. Foul ball? Low plane? Maybe vanished.

I imagine an empty wash of tears, that hill a mere solid slope for grief to lean into.

Nana says we're crazy, no Carmen lives here and that's no way to bury the dead, yet tells us not to eat Mr. Hahn's rhubarb since he sprinkled the patch with his Mrs.

This is how I learn the truth about faith: Nana feeds us veggies born of compost and crap but won't dare taste the neighbor, believes more in a living God in heaven than a dead Carmen in her own backyard. Look, I say, but she won't, ever. Not even when I threaten to dig, not when I lash out that even Jesus unearthed himself as proof.

Instead, she says enough. It's getting dark, and it's my turn to tend the garden.

-CATHRYN COFELL, APPLETON, WI

On the Meaning Of

This is what life does. It wakes you in the morning before the morning glories open and gives you the sound of your mother's voice. Life spreads itself across the ceiling to make you think you are penned in, but that is just another gift. Life takes what you thought you couldn't live without and gives you a heron instead. Or a dragonfly, stitching its way through the milkweed. Life contains all of your tears in a vessel shaped like hands in prayer. Life is shape and touch and sound and bone. It whispers and sings and touches you all over and you almost never feel it. You push your way from phase to phase. You are a horse with blinders. You think you are pulling forward but you are being driven. While going about your solitary life, one hoof in front of the other, real life is turning the stars, like mirrors, in your direction.

-LINDA BACK MCKAY, MINNEAPOLIS, MN

Finding a Poem 🔨

A cat has jumped up on my chair, is there a verse there? I have seen this same cat everyday for eight years, we have grown a bit older together and all the poems residing in his night-dark fur have been spoken. He'll have to wait today.

The other one lies sleeping and there is nothing new about a sleeping cat, is there? His tail curls around his body like a snake; his eyes are closed but his ears are alert waiting for a breath of excitement or perhaps a poem of his own, but he is probably sick of writing about his people and how they sit for hours in front of a computer staring at him and tapping away expectantly.

-JACKIE LANGETIEG, VERONA, WI visit VW Online for audio by this author

-IOHN LEHMAN, ROCKDALE, WI

Stonecarver

He fancies himself A brother to pirates and corsairs. And he sits in the village tavern Sporting a beret he bought on a drunken spree In Madison, the week he sold his tombstone works. Now, he sits and smokes and coughs and swears. He savs he does not know What to make of young people like me. All I know is that he is no advertisement for stone carving. You don't spend years plowing stone plains with a chisel Without getting stone farmer's lung. Talk about beholding fear in a handful of dust.

-JOHN SIME, READSTOWN, WI

Accomplice

I'm the nondescript one in the heavy coat and the black mood, pockets emptied of keys and coins, water bottle confiscated.

I'm listening to the announcements, one delay after another. It's the way we fly now, drained and edgy, as if we hadn't slept for a week.

At security, an armed guard removes a Makita drill from someone's duffel, waves it like a weapon--which perhaps it is-- and scans the rest of us, all implicated. We shrink into our suddenly insufficient skins, avert our eyes and study our guilty hands.

I'm earbudded, buzzed with caffeine and fluorescence, the one in the last row, considering varieties of weather, whether the flight will go, whether there's a code-word, some inside information I should know.

> -ANTONIA CLARK, WINOOSKI, VT visit VW Online for audio by this author

Revising Your Poems 🔊

by Michael Kriesel

So many planets have to line up for a poet to Otherwise we'd all reach full potential. Revision is one of them. Not Jupiter, but maybe Mercury. You wouldn't write poems if you didn't like playing with words. So why not develop that playfulness and I'd be sitting further...via revision?

1. Last Line First / Best Line First

Got a lackluster poem? Take the last line (or If not for death the best line) and throw out everything else. Start over with that one line as the opening of a whole new poem. Use the process to reboot your brain.

2. Saving What Works

Often more than just one line needs to be extracted and expanded on. Here's a failed Abecedarium of mine that contained an idea worth salvaging. The germ of a separate poem is in boldface.

Where Light Goes

Zombie Christ rises like a B movie. Yet be not deceived. None return from death. X is the true cross of man, marks the spot where light goes, leaving images behind. Vivid an instant. Gone but permanent. Understand, like light, we die. Otherwise time would stop. We'd all still be in Egypt, still building pyramids, still watching the river of snakes swimming the dress of that cute Egyptian girl dicing onions, a paring knife in her hand. My eyes are wet on waking, face numb from loss. Her face still no less real than mine. Or that pair of eyesmagician's eyes-from fifteen years ago. Lord of Illusions, The Great Sandini knifed my soul, staring from a 10-foot tall jet-black poster. An ephemera shop in Pike Place Market. Like twin eclipses his eyes burned through the decades between us, glowed like fire opals. Grew white hot as road flares. Gazed on the essential dead, bricks in ethereal pyramids. Agnostic, dad gets a Christian burial. Some small comfort to mom. We drive through sloppy snow Below, toads hibernate. And I curse time's architect for being right, forever.

Here's what I developed from the above:

Old Flame

I'm glad we die.

still be in Egypt raising pyramids

at that wooden table dicing onions with a pretty servant girl.

I'd still be drowning in her slender river, clutching my bronze paring knife with its bone handle. instead of waking up with a wet pillow half hypnotized by yellow serpents swimming on her dark blue dress.

In the case of "Old Flame," revision helped me follow the vein in the marble-more of a hands-off approach, allowing the poem to develop the way it wanted to, and not according to my preconceptions. This doesn't happen often, but when it does, I end up with something I wouldn't have otherwise, something different from what I'd normally write. Sometimes that leads my writing in a new direction.

3. Follow Through

Sometimes I get off to a good start...and just stop. "Atheist Heaven" was originally five lines.

Atheist Heaven

There's an empty church in heaven, a spray of stars I don't believe in. I walk for hours staring at my feet. Dark houses crowd the street like echoes waiting for a sound.

More than a year later, I finally followed through on the idea.

Atheist Heaven

There's an empty church in heaven, a spray of stars I don't believe in. Dark houses crowd the streets like echoes waiting for a sound. Mutely my shoes lead me to a lobby, then an elevator, finally a penthouse office. Floor-to-ceiling windows sing with exclamation points of light! No one's sitting at the desk big as four pool tables. Veins of pink and yellow squiggle in the marble. I see a vacancy and fill it. The universe runs itself. A black chrysanthemum closes continuously, deflowering creation at the end of time.

4. Start A Salvage Yard

Start a salvage yard of images, ideas, and lines saved from broken poems. Some lines of mine have taken years to find their final resting place. Here's an extreme example, composed mostly of old lines, which I've boldfaced.

Like Sunglasses You Can't Take Off

How the hand's a planchette for the soul and religion's like ice cream: Peanut Butter Buddha, Key Lime Christ.

So many beautiful lies about time our memories sieve from our lives.

Tint all the graveyards you want with stained glass

no one comes back from the dead except in zombie movies.

The crow in my throat says goodbyeblack boomerang that gave me gravity.

I say ah, tasting smoke as it goes.

I'd rather say zebras sport unicorn horns orange as traffic cones

but halos dissolve here like wintergreen Life Savers.

In my brain's basement, a reference librarian sits at a gray, metal, government desk. When I'm writing, she hands me whatever old image or line I need, when I need it. It's a blessing in this line of work, to be sure. Often these phrases are years (or decades) old, but never #### found a poem worthy of them.

But if memory isn't that helpful, keep these gems in a folder, a journal, or even just save all the various drafts of your poems, combing through them periodically for new ways of approaching the ideas / material. These can also be the seeds for future poems.

5. Haiku Titles

For years my titles sucked. Some mightily. Most often they were barely competent, content to label things: Sailor on a Greyhound, Communion, Country Garage. You get the picture.

Then about a year ago, I loosened up. I belonged to an online critique group, and one day I sent out a poem entitled Phantosmia (a term for olfactory hallucinations). But I was a little tired that day, maybe a little punchy, and in the subject line I wrote Though I Detest Incense, Still I Smell God.

A few of my critique group members said they liked the subject line a lot better than the title. So I used it. Since I didn't think the subject line "counted" or mattered, I had allowed myself to be more creative with it. I kept doing this...and then began incorporating a lesson I'd learned from writing haiku. In haiku you pair two images that aren't obviously connected, but that have a kind of subconscious resonance between them, like the invisible sparks between magnets. I began writing titles that didn't have a literal connection to their poems, but that somehow complemented them. Here's one example:

Like a Raspberry Seed Between My Teeth

Across the road a white screen door slaps. Redwing blackbirds scatter.

Cattails' slow explosions fill the ditch. I crack a beer and watch.

Last night at the Badger Tap someone asked me why I came back to Wisconsin.

Even in peacetime ten years in the navy was killing me.

An east-to-west airliner slowly flies over. Its contrail spreads.

Sometimes it's what we're not that matters most.

(published in Verse Wisconsin)

6. Leftover Lines

did in this one:

Steering from the Passenger Side

Somewhere near the county line my piece of shit Dodge dies. The sun melts my jeans and black t-shirt like biodegradable trash bags. A mile later, my cock drops off. A crow snags it, tumbling up like a birthday balloon or a shingle torn off hell's roof in a windstorm.

No other cars. My flat feet slap the yellow line. Blacktop burns my soles. I'm dangling my legs in the ditch, staring at a thistle's ultraviolet crown when my eyes fall out. Two bushes sprout and I see clearly through a hundred yellow berries, in all directions like a flythe road ahead, the way back home, the flyspeck of that crow, my body by the road.

One of my titles was even a recycled one-line haiku (there are such things) that had been published in a leading haiku journal: A whale of stars swallows me.

Even my label titles got better: Bat Boy Finds Love, Friday Night at the Haiku A Go-Go, Viral Savior, Popeye Murders Me, Superboy Robots, Dead Poets in Hell. Loosening what I thought was acceptable as a title also allowed me to expand my range of topics, and vice versa. Some of these "looser" poems have been accepted by Alaska Quarterly, Antioch Review, Crab Creek Review, and Rattle.

7. My Road To Revision

Until five years ago I only wrote free yerse, revising very little. Then I started working in forms, and revising more, getting the poem to flow better within the constraints of whatever form I was working in. This revision habit

18 VERSE WISCONSIN #106 JULY 2011

Sometimes a line you've cut from an earlier draft makes an interesting title. That's what I carried over to my free verse and improved my poems. It tightened the writing, resulting in richer musicality.

These days half my poems are forms and half are written in free verse. I've also gone back and revised many older poems, some written several years ago.

On average I spend 10-40 hours on a poem, 2-3 hours each morning. First drafts are usually easy, flowing out in an hour or two. With the second draft, the poem's 90% done. The majority of time for me is spent fine tuning via drafts #3 on, getting that last 10% of the poem as perfect as possible.

I'll often return to a poem months later. Sometimes years go by between revisions (or versions), as with Drinking With Your Ghost...

Drinking With Your Ghost After The Funeral

Sitting in a pickup in the middle of a field, the engine ticking down to nothing, windows filled with rows of corn stalking into shadow, I drink until you're sitting next to me though we both know you're really at the cemetery, what was left of you after the accident concealed by oak and bronze and varnish and miraculously healed in everybody's memory. Still the whiskey lurches back and forth between us in the muddy light until the bottle's dry and dark as that smoked glass we used to watch eclipses through, though tonight there's just a wobbly moon and a few raccoons stealing corn like no one's there. (1985)

drinking with your ghost raccoons steal corn like no one's there (2010)(published in Modern Haiku 42.2 Summer 2011)

Revision won't magically make a bad poem good, or a good poem great. But if there are seeds of goodness, uniqueness, or greatness currently in your work, adding revision to the equation will give your poetry a much better chance of developing its full potential.

This Book of Signal Spell and Secret Sigil Was found in the armoire of Raz Durose, Physician to the King and Queen of Jordan.

Its Hebrew was Englished by one Emmet Siegel, Whose agent told him he should stick to prose. But how it got here's hardly that important—

Only the Spirit matters, only the Spell is binding, Only the Hidden will reward the Finding.

Only the Unseen is worth rewinding.

Sigil 1: The Double Helix

Four letters climb the winding stair, The Tree, the Cat, the Grin, the Air; Two strands must braid to make the ladder, Live Wire linked to Lethal Adder; Four letters stepwise spiral higher, The Tomb, the Ant, the Ground, the Choir.

Draw a grid,	4 x 4.
Chant aloud:	"Elsinore,
Dunsinane,	Blackamoor,
Heathen rain."	Then insert
These occult	characters,
Cross the top,	down the left,
From old Rome's	alephbeth.

А	С	Т	G
С	Metaphor	Rhythm	Image
Т	Spider	Cicada	Scarab
G	Shakespeare	Swinburne	Pound

Commentary on the First Table, or the Table of the Deoxyribonucleotides:

From the al-Qur'an, and the various traditions surrounding the Prophet Mahomet, the true Magus learns that the making of images is forbidden, or haraam. The mind that multiplies reality does so by feeding on Thought, as reflected back to it in Perception (which is reality without Thought); and by doing so feeds, as it were, upon a body without soul, as the scarab thrives on the corse of Pharaoh. Just so the cicada will clack its timbrals, but the sound is out of proportion to the Insect making it. The attempt to turn language into music is to shuck words of their meaning, and hence the Original Word (as spoken of in Genesis) of its Divine Meaning; to throw away the silent kernel of Creation, and treasure the percussive husk. The supreme Weaver is the Spider, who spins out gossamer Metaphor from his belly,

Amit Majmudar The Pricklypear Grimoire

and holds Creation still for contemplation in the Web of his connections, every line of his a high wire between precipices, traversing which would otherwise take a leap of faith. The Spider reproduces the Mind of the Maker at the time of the Act. The Magus must become a Spider-man, growing eight arms—and writing with them all.

Sigil 2: The x and y Axes

Two straight lines, Level and Upright, The x and y, the Breadth and Height, The Collarbones athwart the Spine, Rafters of longing, pillar of pine: Before they made the Crucifix, these Four right angles formed two Axes; Four nineties, when the math was squared, Equalled one Intelligible Sphere.

When Xenophon weds Yourcenar To music yoking the effects Of Xylophones and Yodelers, Then his XY and her XX Shall yes and more and yes and yes And with two letters spell all texts.

[Raz Durose's Doggerel Marginalia to the Foregoing: Hajji Yusuf swung a U And ended up in Xanadu So did a serious Syrian come To the pleasure-domes of heathendom]

Graph a grid	2 x 2,
One for me,	one for you,
Abel, Cain,	intertwined,
Twin intents,	single Mind,
Vulpine y,	death and growth,
Vervet x,	love them both.

Х	Y
X	Hamlet

Commentary on the Second Table, or the Table of the Variable

The hamlet, a fish possessing both Male and Female organs of generation, knows the act of Union from both perspectives, like the Greek mage, Tiresias (though he was first male, then female, then male again, never both simultaneously). This is the rare, sexual wisdom of the androgynous Archmage (whom some call Jesus, and others, Maddalena) transcending the me sexual knowledge which is the Seducer's, that is, Satan's. The true Magus, like the indecisive hamlet, opts for both, his eyes his ovaries. The fertility of self-love is infinite; it is always in the mood.

Sigil 3: The $eptapartite $erpent

Here is the highest Sigil, that commands Demonic spirits like so many hands, The Leaf that's green at the same time it's gold, As hard to grow as it is to hold. Temptation, figured as the S beginning The words for Simper, Summer, Simmer, Sinning, And then the parallels that sever it In seven bits.

> Lucky number Prime like 3, but Not the holy, Mater dolorosa? The higher the priest, 7 x 7, not in heaven the high roller. Dollarous dollar the whiter the collar.

S	Е	R	Р	Е	Ν	Т
Ε	Carbon	Glucose	Sweetness	Your Piece of the Pie	The Whole Pie	Someone Else's Pie, with Whipped Cream
R	Oxygen	Air	Breath	National Airspace	Strictly Enforced No- Fly Zones	Militarization of Space
Р	Nickel	Dime	Savings Account	Expense Account	Golden Toilet	Golden Parachute
Е	Helium	Levity	Levitation	Flight	Lunar Landing	Overpriced Lunar Real Estate
Ν	Lead	Lead Pipes	Lead Poisoning	Psychosis	Development of Alchemy	Gold
Т	Hydrogen	Hydro carbons	Plant Life	Crude Oil	Fusion Reaction	Bikini Atoll

Sigil 4: The Incantation

les:		for commanding the twenty-six Succubi; to be spoken with a Marble under the tongue.
		to be spoken with a Marble under the tongue.
f	А	Triangle on serif legs,
	В	Squat and lay a twinning Egg.
	С	Single-horseshoed, halfbreed Mare,
	D	Wag your tongue at me no more.
1	Е	Leave the shortest leg unnamed,
ere	F	Break my right, I'm still not lame.
2	G	Evil is a cul-de-sac,
	Н	Push the Pillars, hear them crack;
ne	Ι	One's left standing, roof and foot,
	J	Till the Stone has snaked a Root.
	ĸ	Hedgehog on the Norman strand,
	L	Pistol in a dead man's hand,
	Μ	Buckle, ceiling, in the middle,
	N	Draw a slash across the riddle.
	0	Mahu's mouth is but a Hole
	P	When the Flag is on the Pole;
	Q	When the Splinter's Gouged the Ball,
	Ř	Recess ends, and Britain falls;
	S	For the Serpent has not lost
	T	Till the Ropes have stood the Cross;
	Ū	Till he fill the inkwell Grail,
	V	Hammering will crook the Nail,
	Ŵ	Icicles will tooth the gutter,
-	X	Error red-pen all we utter.
	2 L

Y Blossom, Tree, and fruit with Fig:

Z Zag shall be restored to Zig.

Amit Majmudar's first book, 0°,0° [Zero Degrees, Zero Degrees], (Northwestern University Press/ TriQuarterly Books, 2009) was a finalist for the Norma Farber First Book Award. His second manuscript, Heaven and Earth, won the 2011 Donald Justice Award. His first novella, Azazil, was serialized recently in The Kenyon Review over three issues. His first novel, Partitions, was published by Henry Holt/Metropolitan in 2011. His poetry has been featured on Poetry Daily several times and has appeared in Poetry Magazine and The Best American Poetry 2007. He lives in Dublin, Ohio.

Three Card Monte

1. Poet as Dealer

Ménage-a-card is what I play post-poetry – words (then hands) will find-the-lady, leave their mark in clever dedications. I'll mark her book with scotch rings, stretch the play from bar to bed. Which one? My hands first brush black's wrist, and then my hands run zig-zag down red's back. I play the poems, read my queens and mark –

I mark to win, or play more hands.

2. Queen of Hearts

Devoted to his art, his hands punch air with gestures, leave a mark that fades, won't last beyond what's played for laughs or tears, seductions played to raise the stakes. He slides his hands around my waist in jest, a mark to make me his. He thinks this mark is easy, weak for rhyme, that hands this fast get everything but played, yet played he is. My hands mark red.

3. Queen of Spades

It's poetry that leaves the mark, not him – the words, the beat, the play of rhyme. I want the flaming hand, the muse divine and not the hand he's inching toward my thigh. No mark he makes on me takes flight. No play that vows he'll read my work or play the go-between will make me mark his bed. This queen unmans the hand, a hand in play without a mark.

-MARYBETH RUA-LARSEN, SOMERSET, MA

Selected Animal Cracker Stories

1. Congress votes on the upper class baggy pants interviews dyed blonde during a four hundred dollar hair cut green beans farm bill. And before you can whistle Dixie Chicks a seeing eye dog serves in three different wars then retires in a hula skirt.

2. A brothel riding in the back of a van spots Girl Scout cookies on an oil rig of rocket-propelled grenades fired into the toilet stall where a senator caught a line drive ball playing against her sister Serena in the US tennis shoes, airborne with the no-smoking sign on.

3. The unidentified man used only barbed wire to cut an identity card out of crowds of young Iraqis with landmines blooming in Baghdad. Later, the mugger runs through the park in her car under a streetlight swatting asphyxia on a skateboard speeding downhill in the pouring rain.

4. Or in the mind of magnolias as neighbors talk over a fence of boundless AK-47s to capitulate. Voluptuous lips. Phenomenal hips. This interconnection of single lawn mowers. O swinging suburbia, with a post office in Safeway, wearing flip-flop Jacuzzi, grows in my organic garden.

-MAURICE OLIVER, PORTLAND, OR

Shuffling Through The Evening News

Dinner time kerosene heart burn of fluids in the swine dish curled as if it were a ram's head of sweetbread cork opener wine glass from five and dime or a fetus-fired napkin holder with lint in a pocket book of time based on the hierarchy of supply line border patrols of an incestuous nature a sisterhood of road rage stuffed in a dumpster smells like old gym shoes now fast forward to a truncheon interviewing the windsurfer about higher tuition or poppy fields of the open-minded with the exception always being drew when he sees women suckling in public.

-MAURICE OLIVER, PORTLAND, OR

Confession

I haven't been since eighth grade. In high school once, I followed a girl into the girl's lavatory. The girl's name was Caroline. My brother once had a Golden Retriever;

I liked that dog more than most people I know. I never liked The Canterbury Tales.

I think that French fries are a vegetable and country is the Special Olympics of music. I have a short attention span. I hold grudges, and have more regrets than you could shake a stick at. I repeat myself. My French is nowhere near as fluent as when I lived in France 27 years ago. I like to play with matches. I'm usually the only person in the room who thinks I'm funny. I couldn't tell you whether I have life insurance.

I prefer my hammock to work or church. I go to the movies by myself and I love it.

-Richard Hedderman, Wauwatosa, WI

Her marching orders

The soft incessant hum of the refrigerator was playing in her head all afternoon, until finally she opened the back door, grabbing her pocketbook, and walked out of the kitchen, leaving the door open; she didn't look back on the piles of dishes stacked up in the sink or that she had left the water running, she just turned the corner of the house and walked out to the street; the never ending humming still ringing in her head down to her heart: she walked down the block. waited at the bus stop, got on the first bus with no clear idea of where or why she was going; she just knew she had to make a move before she went crazy, she just knew she wouldn't be missed until dinner time.

–CHARLES PORTOLANO, Fountain Hills, AZ

Momentum

I.

On the Friday night we did not go to San Francisco I went to a poetry reading and you were in the hospital because you weren't you.

You asked me to bring you back a present so I wrote you a poem about not going to San Francisco while you stayed in your room and read Anna Karenina.

On Saturday night, I played cribbage at the bar with the old-timers. You made popcorn and tried to get the other patients to dance.

On Sunday, you washed your hair and waited for me to come so we could talk.

II.

The mums--the ones you got from your dad when you were in the hospital in April-are opening again.

It's too late, though. The freeze is coming tonight and by tomorrow their yellow lids will be permanently peeking out.

> At the grass turning brown the wilted stalks falling the flitting of the sparrows.

-THOMAS J. ERICKSON, MILWAUKEE, WI

testing my worth weekly

wednesday mornings i bring the garbage around from the back of the house to the front

i sit myself down next to two trash-filled cans and a blue container of recyclables to see if they would take me along with the rest of it

-CASEY QUINN, CHARLOTTE, NC

Not Sleep ~

The nights I scream I have no dreams. Wake early. Tired. The nights I dream I dread to wake to obligations, silence. The nights that sleep keeps vigil with the sweaters in my dresser drawers are nights ignored with novels. The times that migraines knock me to the floor are neither sleep nor waking: I close down to darkness, open late to clumsiness d i s s i p a t e.

They say that cells have memories. Perhaps each cell sings its own desire -- flight, swimming, relocate? Perhaps each cell remembers ocean: the small, wet plankton and the screaming fish. Perhaps when cells feel safe they weep and shake, rage against the blood-deep hate pattern pressing on their walls, that the body, wisely, wipes from its last nerve to serve the greater good #### and wake.

-P.R. DYJAK, STEVENS POINT, WI

Sleep Cycle

Dark thoughts tumble. A laundry list of niggles, doubts and regrets. Throw in a sneaker to balance the load and then it's thump & thud all night long.

-ANTONIA CLARK, WINOOSKI, VT visit VW Online for audio by this author

And yet, we do have a lovely house. We've been convinced since the day we bought it. And two cars that are, according to the advertisement, better than every other car. There's even a kid on the way. And wombs don't lie.

The Average Couple

"As it is now it will always be."

But we've been at this a lifetime.

A thousand, maybe ten.

But isn't life built on lies.

Let candor have its way

Well, indifference anyway.

And you must have the same delusions.

The glass gives back what you want to believe.

How many times did we meet by the bandstand?

And what about those walks through the park?

It's the glue that holds the monotony together.

and the whole thing could collapse into hatred.

Even my solitary strolls include you now.

The first lie was who else would have me.

Maybe that was the first truth as well.

I no longer know what is true and what is untrue.

The lies fly back and forth. Our tongues become us.

And what do I see in the mirror but the man who said,

Sometimes, I need to get away from it all, go fishing with the guys. Surprisingly, the lies don't fester in my absence, They ferment into a kind of wine, in fact. You can sip it while you go about your business, feel its warmth all the way down. Call it love. The actors on TV do.

> Love. Now that's one hell of a lie. It's like the trout I caught the last time, a giant in the telling but, in reality, had it been any tinier I'd have had to throw it back. And yet, how good it tasted. At least, we said it did.

> > –JOHN GREY, JOHNSTON, RI

Arabella's Birthday

At the piano, scrunching her pecan toes in their little boats of shoes, she presses the compliant pedal, allowing the vibrations to linger longer in the wood and in the air the case of mahogany, the soundboard of tight-grained spruce.

Lately, it is the scent of cedar and the resonance of brass-wound strings that lift her spirit, grant momentary wings vanishing as the scent dissipates or sound dies.

In the rocking chair, she sharpens pencils with a little sharpener made of brass. The cedar shavings that curl on her fingers she saves in a muslin sack.

For her birthday, there was a frosted, candled cake, a little choir of flames on spiraling stalks, her name in florid, sugar-ice script, frosting flowers frozen forever on the verge.

They sang, she wished, she blew, extinguishing the flickering motes of mystery.

They ate the wedges of cake, dismembering it slice by slice, the angle of emptiness left by the vanishing cake widening like clock hands flying farther apart.

People walked wineglasses around the house, sat on the back deck where torches spewed citronella smoke, spoke about work, the weather, and what they'd one day do.

Arabella slides into her shoes—little canvas canoes and glides along the hall. She sits on the bottom stair, curls her cashew toes, scratches her walnut nose, her body an assemblage of things that might one day sprout into trees.

She leaves the house, walks up the hill, sits beneath the gingko tree its scimitar leaves hanging like earrings or axe heads along the upswept branches.

She thinks of the cake and sees a clock– the cake a clock, the clock a face– faces pierced in seven places to allow the air, the light, sounds, scent, and food to reach us in our lonely house of bone.

-TIMOTHY WALSH, MADISON, WI

24 VERSE WISCONSIN #106 JULY 2011

What One Has

I'm having lunch with a friend she says and I hear the pleasure in her voice. It's her birthday after all and my best wish is for her to be happy, perhaps having a glass of fine wine in a small bistro in Chelsea with someone new and interesting who may be more than a friend or not, the moment is the essence of this transaction in my head. Today I had lunch with three friends as I do on most days, but today we didn't talk of the vagaries of dark rooms as we call corporate amerika. We talked of travel and sports and may have touched on a book or two but mostly it was about anything except the day to day that tends to consume all of us and turn our winning smiles into those parenthetic frowns popular on twitter these days. My daughter is 24. It seems like only vesterday she was born between two blizzards on Cape Cod, snow so high, wind so strong, I spent her first night with her and her mother in a hospital bed cramped but safe and dry; the energy and love I felt from those tiny fingers clutching the blanket and finally my fingers was more than a weak hearted man could ever endure.

-MARC SWAN, PORTLAND, ME

bound

each word in this poem is stolen from the books that sit surrounding me

i'm not ashamed to say i'm drunk on irish whiskey or my lover lies waiting in a bed steps away near the window where snowflakes now fall pelting out metaphors piling, piling

up to our spines

-JESSE MANSER, MILWAUKEE, WI visit VW Online for audio by this author

Ailings

crap it's almost christmas

kmart layaway commercials

are on the ty

one year when we were poor my mom bought me luke skywalker on layaway

but he was on backorder and christmas day came and went my friend graham got han solo and I felt bad for han having to take on the dark side all on his own

graham let me know when han was about to go on a mission and I'd go over to his place come to think of it graham let me know about every mission that winter

graham also knew I kept that page from the jc penney catalogue with luke's picture in my pocket

-JESSE MANSER, MILWAUKEE, WI visit VW Online for audio by this author

> Heart come(s) closer. Years of vertigo expose an inner tide: Cannot stay putinhale sends torso forward, exhale, back. Underneath, heartbeat pushes to and fro-Catch shadow on wall, moving.

Lose a breast and heart's right there, right under palm, its steady muscle pushing against rib and intercostal muscles to muscles of hand-Feel pulse from heart as well as pulse in palm, from blood thrust against skin.

-SARA GREENSLIT, MADISON, WI

Sore - Uncle Dom dropping in, a little short this month.

Abscess - Dom back, still as charming. Just a little more, Mary? Blood poisoning - Dom skippedy-do; your wallet's twenties too.

Ache – your husband, lounge chair lumpen specimen, setting new records for TV catatonia. Throb - Melanie, next cubicle over, everyone's therapist phone drone. I'm here for you. Blah, blah, blah. Spasm - your sister, family reunion, 80 decibels: You hate me, you always did!

Ulcer - the town's only factory gone, its sludge pool a tourist attraction. Amputation - Main Street stores lopped away, one by one. Paralysis – your job gone, your house in foreclosure; you, its pillar, in its shadowed center.

-RICHARD SWANSON, MADISON, WI

Waiting 🔨

"I wouldn't call it a time bomb," he says. I would. I kick him in the foot. The cancer on my kidney, my only kidney, is inside me, not him. This young surgeon looks 18, must be 30, 35. He has the power to decide. I have to wait. Four months, since June.

I'm not a whiner. I don't have panic attacks or headaches. At least I didn't used to. Now I shake In the middle of the night, or when I'm sitting at the dinner table. My husband holds me and we wait. Now we parry and thrust with this doctor, asking our questions.

I ask for one more test. "All right," he says, and I get a new scan, right then. After an interval he calls me back into his office. "This is good," he says. "I see it better now. I can take that off."

I get on the surgery schedule for December.

-ESTER PRUDLO, MONTGOMERY, AL & FITCHBURG, WI

American Idol

Other echoes inhabit the garden. Shall we follow? -Eliot, "Burnt Norton"

Far from the icy air of Plato's forms they float like lesser gods, fluid, ephemeral through this, our world of vistaed screens, each celebrity du jour voted in then voted off-

-As if it's a show, reality, The Swan, Hell's Kitchen, Project Runway, another stab at the mappa mundi, expansion westward, atomic trail-

Here's the passkey I need to get connected, the tunes loaded, the hours to go. This is how I know I'm American, no dizzy drive through minefields; no hot pursuit by angered kings-

Here's trying to keep my image up, stylist at work while I track a hundred channels. Here's Posh & Becks, our latest immigrants. No live-in help since they like to wander naked, lounge in stylish dishabille.

With a knockout figure like mine, the stylist says, angling for a better tip, I, too, could sport a posh bob, I could go that blonde.

-JANE SATTERFIELD, BALTIMORE, MD

Partners ~

My surgeon ran over me with a robot, Starting at my belly button, punched six holes for cameras and probes. He drives that thing like a racecar, Enjoys driving his robot, zapping tumors. I admire his skill. We are confederates he and I. We share a laugh together two days later in my hospital room I have six holes in my gut, But the cancer is all gone.

-ESTER PRUDLO, MONTGOMERY, AL & FITCHBURG, WI

Formula One Indianapolis

This is road racing where they changed the Indy 500 ovalnot just muscle cars roaring round and round, but made into this tricky track, curvy chicanery.

The announcer over rock 'n roll at this "citadel of speed" pumps the crowd, some waving 25-ounce Foster's cans, concession stands and giant signs everywhere.

Fans wave Ferrari flags. On the tightest curves camera buffs crowd the woven fence. Beer and brats, lucky cool May day. Giant screens at strategic spots preview the drivers the cars from Spain, Germany, Italy, India, Canada, none American yet but plenty of Yanks in the stands, nations united for speed! and here they come nineteen thousand five hundred rpm million dollar engines' mosquito whine and million dollar tires. When drivers let up on the gas backfiring like wartime you can't hear yourself think or even feel yourself tingling just the cars!

The crowd ecstatic at last for this they flew oceans fought snarls of traffic walked miles to this tightly controlled and safe violence, such innocence, nations united in the mystique of speed and skill 220 miles an hour where are we speeding the earth 67,068 miles an hour around the sun the sun 44,712 miles an hour around the galaxy the further the galaxies are the faster they move apart the farthest quasar 15 billion light-years away any galaxy with a redshift greater than 1.4 is moving away from us faster than the speed of light where is it going where are we going on this lucky cool June day? Slowly after every race they vacuum the old brickyard blacktopped now.

-R. VIRGIL ELLIS, CAMBRIDGE, WI

Something

When he said asparagus he meant perpendicular. When he said chair he meant singular. When he went crazy he took no one with him. When he came back from wherever he was he wasn't happy with whomever it was he returned with. Not that he didn't recognize who it was more he wasn't in the mood. For mood he meant something else and for something else he meant to say Can you give me directions to the nearest grocery store? When he said grocery store he meant The Statue of Liberty. When he said statue he meant whomever.

Whenever he said tree he meant tree and whenever he said water he meant water. When he said spring he meant almost here. When he said sky he did not know what he meant so he stood there for hours in the side yard confusing the roof of his garage with the neighbor's chimney nearby. When he thought nearby he wanted to mean sky but really it didn't. Instead it meant now.

Once in the middle of the night in the middle of a dream while he slept in the middle of the bed he remembered the word morning. When he woke he said morning but really he meant tomorrow. And when tomorrow came he said nothing. Of course he meant something but nothing very specific.

-CX DILLHUNT, MADISON, WI

Lake View r

We often hear of the shimmering diamonds strewn across the surface of a grand body of water while the sharp white peaks of sailboats cut through the air.

Usually overlooked is the intrusive angling of the breakwater, dark and corroded by years of overuse, the tug and the barge trailing thick trains of smoke.

We are familiar with the young lovers watching clouds floating by in each other's eyes, a half empty bottle of wine and a wicker picnic basket holding down the corners of a windblown blanket.

Forgotten is the specter standing at water's edge, hands neatly clasped behind his back as he searches the dusk-colored vastness for a memory.

-CHRISTOPHER AUSTIN, MILWAUKEE, WI

MyFault

The sun was hot, the wind calm. I wanted a few minutes of quiet conversation with the friends who had joined us on the sailboat while our kids explored the island of Poros. We knew about the meltemme, how the wind whips up most summer afternoons in the Aegean, but it hadn't happened to us. So I left the dock lines on deck to be coiled later, after we had rested awhile. Suddenly, the foresail filled and split. In our rush to get it down, someone kicked a line overboard. The stiff main would not go up. The propeller gagged on the line. There we were in the midst of a fullblown meltemme with no power, headed straight to a rocky shore. Never used a sea anchor but soon learned to mount it and steer the boat before the wind at a headlong pace into the harbor we had left. Anchor- stopped in thirty feet. Over the side to cut the line. The prop worked, thank the gods, and we motored sheepishly to shore. That evening, taking turns with a heavy needle to mend the sail, we talked in hushed tones. The image we never fail to see as we tell this story is the look on the face of our least-experienced sailor as she said while we were struggling with the sails, What do you mean, keep it into the wind?

-ESTELLA LAUTER, FISH CREEK, WI

Writing with My Left Hand

I'm writing this with my left hand concentrating on every word, every letter there is no flow here–no grace to these words I am writing this with my left hand as my right hand twitches with anxiety the muscle use is different, the thoughts unfamiliar am I the person still writing or is this the voice of shadow-shell of self

I used to be this person, spinning the world on a separate axis; my right hand needs to hold the page down, to stop the world from spinning away and falling off the desk I'm writing this with my left hand and it's tiresome

my left hand is stronger and has more scars the arthritis hurts more, the fingers more crooked for some reason my teeth are clenched as I'm writing this with my left hand my right hand is laughing at me-not so godly after all this is starting to cramp but I have more to say maybe it is the right hand who writes in shadow maybe this is who I was meant to be: graceless, unrefined, sincere. It is difficult to write this way.

-JAMES REITTER, SHEBOYGAN, WI

They Lower San Biagio Blessing Children into My Arms

La chiesa di San Biagio, Gerfalco, Toscana, Italia

The small wooden church pew has been turned around below the high, single back window looking out onto the castle as boards lean into the gap between the seat and the back pointing upward along the massive entrance doors, wood clamps holding this ready-made saintly slide, the ropes attached above his shoulders where Massimo our Maestro Vetratista has carefully removed two pieces of glass (one on the right and one on the left from the top corners of the middle section) where Césare our blacksmith today agrees his iron frame is strong enough and I am told if anything goes wrong get out of the way save yourself after all Biagio is huge and heavy and mostly glass and we can fix him put him back together, make a new one and if we are lucky he will mostly stay together even though some of his pieces are bulging, his lead is weak, and chunks of his glass have already fallen with the old cement during his careful fivehour removal from the hole in the wall above.

When the blacksmith and the master window maker ask if I am ready, I can feel the sun pouring through into the early afternoon, still-cold church, San Biagio hanging there waiting, and standing firm above them all, holding one of the ropes, is The Father of the Priest, who introduced himself that way, smiling.

I look up. Shield my eyes. Say, Yes, yes, I am.

-CX DILLHUNT, MADISON, WI

Skyscape

Prague is called the city of a hundred towers, noted for the many spires and basilicas which dot a picture postcard perfect horizon.

> Ancient streets golden enchantments Old World lure

Still-the capital of the crossroads of Europe, residence of mad monarchs, visited by musical geniuses, ma vlast to many more has nothing on his local terrain.

> No alchemy here: tourists crowd medieval sites

To the north, St. Louis' minaret steeple on the left and St. Patrick's dome on the right form the vertical arms of a massive goalpost that frames the moment, waits on a hasty Hail Mary play.

Midtown the Ramada shoots eight stories towards the stars, its plush burgundy carpet interior and matching awnings outside anchor the seat of misplaced Midwestern wealth.

On the southern outskirts, St. Peter's posits a squat, square turret like a solid, righteous thumb, architectural embodiment of Luther's hymn, a might fortress indeed...

> Look upward angel, home seen from the ground floor

-G. A. SCHEINOHA, EDEN, WI

Aftermath

This memory begins at the unlocked door with my anxious call. I glance at your cat sleeping in the next room then my eyes rest on a lifesize doll in a beautiful orange caftan. You hang suspended in the dining area of your kitchen. I don't know how long. The sound of my sustained howl is shocking as I run upstairs to the phone in your study where I can barely speak. In the minutes before help arrives, I stumble sobbing to your bedroom, where you have not slept, see the notes you laid out on the bed. I hear the coroner say your organs can still be used. Your friend is sure you wanted to be found when I describe how your arms were crossed, hands on the shoulders, fingers under the taut cord.

2.

That was May. Everyone told me not to drive until my autopilot returned. But of course I did and found myself backing over curbs getting lost in intersections.

3.

Suddenly your life was more important than my own. I called your friends from elsewhere, everyone for whom I found a number, and slowly pieced together a history I hadn't even begun to imagine. A troubled brother's early advances. A family's refusal to see. Three attempts at suicide. A father whose depression was so deep he lay in a hospital unable to speak. A decision never to pass on those genes.

4.

Friends offered shelter. My son came home from his lab. I called my husband back from Russia My doctor said go to the woods for the summer and do nothing. No travel. Nothing dangerous. No decisions. A life on hold. For the next year, I could not pass the turnoff to your street without seeing a brightly-colored doll.

5.

A secret festered, destroyed one life threatened others. The afternoon before you left us, I saw you framed at the end of our office hall. You sat so still, like sculpted stone. When your friends called that night you put us off, would not let us pass through that door.

-ESTELLA LAUTER, FISH CREEK, WI

Do-It-Yourself Home Improvements

ON is not always on. HOT is not hot. Often hot is not cold either, instead a low-rising steam, a gargle, an unsteady belch of empty.

Tool belts perpetually loaded. A hammer needed here, a screw loose there, duct tape in stacks where framed photos should be.

This was our house. A structure that always hoped for more, that knew money could buy love but wasn't a price we'd pay.

So torn apart at times we'd have to stay away. With a friend or at the Ramada, those neatly wrapped soap marvels, sheer order and tuck.

Back at that house, months with planks for floors, holes where beds should be, possessions in heaps, rooms dark.

As if someone was supposed to stay but wasn't sure they should, as if someone else was trying to leave and not come back.

-CATHRYN COFELL, APPLETON, WI

Always Inside This House

Always inside this house another house longs to be built, gorgeously reconstructed from the raw island ruins of accidental fire and flawed faraway lives, its near-naked rooms exposing sheet rock & nails, sooty sails of wallpaper adrift over bunk beds, windows painted shut to loving beds of bulb lilies in the shore-yard, this house a reminder that all architecture is a sail unfurling the past, a deconstruction under fog, flammable and stark naked form anyone's predawn drowsy fire might spark and catch hold of, the word "Fire" a smoldered headline flaring up to bed down with us while we navigate nakedness together in this doused summerhouse rising daily out of its own reconstructed driftwood and ashy seascape, For Sale

signs dotting the cove, ospreys sailing across The Narrows where sapphire tides carry Friendship Sloops and construct heavenly views as we swim in the bedding of our current well-being, vacant as any house boarded up at each season's close, nakedly posed against pointed firs and half-naked ledges, huddled here, a scarred sailor's shelter one winter, till smoke unhoused him, a kettle left on the stove flame, firing him from the haze of his drunken bed, transients ourselves trying to reconstruct his frostbitten story, a construct of nightmare, hearsay, and buck naked confession, our usual rumpled bedsheets moonlit tonight, taut as sails rigged toward the future, our fiery visitor vanished from the house, the word "house" a mere construction, a blaze of letters like "naked" and "fire" for the one who sailed asleep in our bed.

-KATE SONTAG, RIPON, WI

Someone throw a brick at my head. Be brave. Aim. Pitch it with vigor. Then, please, have a heart. Kneel down to my prostrate body there in the road leaking red on the gold, spreading life fluid on the weeds between the cracks of shiny. Take me home emerald country road, where ruby shoes are nailed to the kitchen floor and Aunt Em, though careworn, turns not away the encyclopedia salesman, who shows her volume 19, page 287: Utopia, as Toto bites his leg, courageous dog that he is.

Dog Bite

I thought there would be warning signs (like the hiss from my cat or the whine of a hinge).

> I thought that moving furniture was a good way to be useful, to belong.

> > I even thought that choices all belonged to me including the one we never talk aboutwho gets to die, who lives forever.

I didn't think a small white dog could catch me unaware, and yet the real surprise was that, when his furious teeth found my hand, > he would not let go. And my own barnacled hold on that great red chair did nothing to dissuade him. That's what I'll remember mostthough his teeth sank to the knuckle, though the pain grew wild as fire, though my free hand waited in the wings > to hide and thus diminish the results.

It's none of those I'll be taking to the future-

just that sturdy bond between us as he bit and held,

> when letting go no longer was an option.

-MARY MERCIER, MADISON, WI visit VW Online for audio by this author

The Land of Oz

-MARILYN WINDAU, SHEBOYGAN FALLS, WI

Set Wing to Wind

A butterfly with a broken wing clung silently to the lattice gate like a flower on a broken stem twirling in the summer wind.

It fanned the air as if satisfied to leave seeds of life waiting, hidden safely in the growth below among blossoms in the fading summer sun.

-Gerald Bertsch, Sheboygan, WI

Without You 🔨

I'd sit in half a world, the rooms beige instead of red, aqua, gold. There'd be no music-track of dogs howling or incessant vacuuming. I'd re-read books, watch TV, drive myself crazy. I'd miss your smile, the song of your voice, the warmth of your body next to mine, the way you care for kids, dogs and cats. Like searching for my missing glasses, without you I wouldn't see what I need in order to see.

–John Lehman, Rockdale, WI

Then and Now 🔊

For forty years he left his shoes in the dining room, thought empty milk cartons went in the fridge, would not read Mailer or Updike, put Mahler on the turntable–loud, and didn't respond to poetry.

These days she shovels snow, cleans the chimney, despairs over a new knock in the engine, shoots predatory woodchucks herself, and shivers under many blankets night after chilly night.

-BARB CRANFORD, HANCOCK, WI

The Big Black Bird

in the green maple tree sings a doleful tune, sitting in the shade on a sunny day.

-RICHARD MOYER, BERWYN, PA

The Blue Time

Twilight is the worst time. Though you are gone ten years now, the blue time still brings to mind your favorite phrase, a child's misspeak that took your fancy 50 years ago and became your mantra-murmured to me with goodbyes, or from the driver's seat; on getting up or presenting a gift; when you broke a cup or interrupted my poem-making. How I yearn to hear it now: you, handing me a glass of sherry while we settle to watch the shadows gather in this place you made for us--I, hearing again, at this blue time, you murmur "Whom loves you."

-BARB CRANFORD, HANCOCK, WI

I Danced with Rose

Her kitchen is like an herb garden. It smells of cut oregano and basil. A small aged man sits at her table eating fresh baked Italian bread. She stands at the old white stove.

Her simple dress is apron wrapped. Lightly her hand moves a long spoon stirring thick red tomato sauce. I touch her gently on the shoulder. She smiles at me, and takes my hand. I say, "Dance with me, Rose."

We dance in her delicious kitchen. I breathe in the richness of her spices as we glide around the wooden table. The old man looks up at us smiling, Rose softly hums a little tune.

-NANCY PETULLA, MERRILL, WI

Dance Me Down 8

I just don't know what to do So dance me down the avenue Be soft and be sweet And be light on your feet Be kind and take care And remember I'm there

-CLINT JENSEN, TOMAH, WI

Attune

The tuner deftly tapped – The clear, translucent tone for me to form. Then pressed against you, deep, and warm...

> A quarter, no a half key round, The sure and skillful task To make us, once, One pure, perfected sound.

-Henk Joubert, Whitefish Bay, WI

Crandma Shoes

My great grandma had one pair of shoes, black leather. Chunky heels, black laces. Serviceable, the catalog labeled them. They lasted forever and her feet hurt.

> The style was basically unchanged for my grandma. Black, serviceable, go-with-everything shoes. Her feet hurt.

My mother's generation caught a break. Hundreds of syles, colors, shapes. Leather softened a bit, styled for comfort and good looks. But her feet hurt.

Now it's my turn. Age-appropriate shoes, cushioned insides over thick rubber soles, designed for walking. I can stand a little longer, work a little longer, . . . did I ask for that? I'm tired, and my feet hurt.

-JUDITH SEPSEY, NEW BERLIN, WI

Denise Duhamel's most recent books of poetry include Ka-ching!, Two and Two (University of Pittsburgh Press, 2009 and edition chapbook (Firewheel Editions, University Press, 1999). Saints of Hysteria: Maureen Seaton and David Trinidad) from Soft Skull Press was published in 2006.

educated at Emerson College (BFA) and Sarah Lawrence College (MFA), Duhamel has read on National Public Radio's All Things Considered and Bill Moyer's PBS television special Fooling with Words. She has been awarded writing residency fellowships both in the United States and Europe. Her poems have been anthologized in Best American Poetry in 1998, 1994, and 1993. A winner of a 2001 National Endowment for the Arts Fellowship in Poetry, she is a professor at Florida International University n Miami.

Friendships can begin in strange and wonderful ways. One good way to connect is by taking a class. I've done this often, traveling as far as Vermont or as close as Iowa. In fact the Iowa Summer Writing Festival is a good choice for Wisconsinites because it's close; and the Iowa program offers weekend workshops, a boon for those who don't want to commit an entire week.

Commit an entire week, I did, in 2000 when, with Cathryn Cofell, I took a class with Denise Duhamel. We'd registered for an advanced poetry class entitled, "Writing Beyond Taboo." This seemed like the perfect fit for two wild Appleton women who wanted to push the limit, press more than a few buttons. We were ready. We'd brought our Rollerblades to get back and forth to class. We'd brought laptops and a printer, plenty of red wine. We'd even considered a visit to the tattoo parlor. And wasn't this the time when Omar and Oscar, two agri-business students at UA, hit on us in the Deadwood Tavern, where we'd gone to copy the graffiti off the bathroom walls for "found poetry"? Unfortunately, the stalls had been repainted, so our plans for collaboration with the likes of Elvis and Margo from Fargo who seemed to do everyone were dashed.

At our first class meeting, introductions were made. Give a bit of personal background

Karla Huston Interviews Denise Duhamel

and our expectations, Denise suggested. As the preambles began, I had a creepy feeling that I was somehow in the wrong room. First there was the woman, a twin, who admitted she suffered from bulimia and was ritually abused by her grandparents. The next woman confessed to being schizophrenic but on medication; and the next, a man named Bob, said he liked writing poems about women's body parts and proved it, often referring to alabaster orbs and the golden, netted curtain. Another was a young woman who'd never written a poem before (wasn't this an advanced class?). Then, there was Penny from Australia, who walked barefoot everywhere, her long, Gypsy skirts swirling. She said she was lesbian, a social worker, daughter of an unnamed famous Australian psychiatrist, and into sadomasochism.

When the table-talk came round to us, Cathryn confessed to being Catholic. But I had no such terrifying admission. I was Lutheran with no encroaching guilt issues, and like Mary Poppins, a life that was "practically perfect" in every way. We were both there, we'd confessed, to learn to write good poems. Over the course of the week, we got to know each other. Bob tried to seduce us after his third martini at the banquet. The Australian invited us to visit but warned that someone had a "hit" out on her, so she'd be hard to find. Sadly, the bulimic was often heard retching in the bathroom across the hall after lunch.

Duhamel, however, was gracious and patient and encouraging, providing enough good prompts to keep Cathryn and me busy typing most mornings. I wrote more new work that week than any class before or since. And since, Denise and I have remained friends; she contributed significantly to my MA thesis: www.margiereview.com/CHAUTAUQUAS/ huston.html . As well, she and I have done two interviews which were published in print and online: http://www.smartishpace.com/ interviews/denise duhamel/.

If you missed her at the fall (2009) Wisconsin Fellowship of Poets' conference, you missed a special experience indeed. In not one, but two presentations, Duhamel spoke about collaboration and using humor in poetry. She is an expert on both. In fact, after listening to a presentation at that same Iowa conference, Cathryn and I began writing collaboratively, too.

Proposal

I became a reverend online so that I could marry my niece and her fiancé who didn't want a traditional wedding I became a reverend shortly after my divorce as the Universal Life Church doesn't care about a cleric's marital status and neither did mv niece

when I told her I was afraid to bring her bad luck she would have none of that and besides who better to officiate than someone who knew the pitfalls of relationships and I could keep an eye on the new couple and they could come to me and I'd know the warning signs I'd missed in my own home and my niece believed in marriage and me regardless of my failures and her fiancé nodded and I told all this to my friend Bruce who was getting divorced himself I was at the beginning of one marriage (as a reverend) and at the end of another (as a spouse) perfectly poised to let him know it was all going to be OK when he said I bet you can't wait to marry someone now that you can I said vou must be kidding I'll never get married again and he said what I mean is I bet you can't wait to marry another couple.

–Denise Duhamel, Hollywood, FL

From my 2004 interview, Duhamel's poetry A streak of terror went Kindergarten Boyfriend has been described as "stunning, suggestive, and startling. Her poems speak with a wild irreverence. Not afraid of critics and naysayers, Duhamel experiments with form and subject, creating poetry that challenges the reader's notion of what poetry should be. She presents what poetry could be as she fully engages pop culture, the joys and horrors of it, while maintaining the ability to poke fun at our foibles-and make us think."

To experience a Duhamel poem is to take a wild or sometimes harrowing ride. Maybe she's gotten a bit crazy about money (Kaching!), or more than terrifying as she recounts How long have you been the moments of September 11, 2001, or her teaching? What does teaching own parents' horrifying fall down an escalator

I had the chance to ask her a few questions via DD: The old joke is: What email recently.

Karla Huston: One of your books, The Woman with Two Vaginas (Salmon Run Press, 1995), a poetic retelling of Inuit myths, has been banned in Canada for years. I'm guessing you don't believe in censorship. As a writer, how does this make you feel?

Denise Duhamel: The Woman with Two Vaginas is out of print, so I guess it's a moot point as to whether or not it is still banned.

Fourth Grade Boyfriend

Then, in fourth grade, the fattest boy in class wrote me a love letter that read, Welcome to this new school. (I had just moved.) You are very pretty. I want to be your boyfriend. I didn't like his plaid shirt or his big melon head, so I crumpled up the note and ignored him. Soon though I realized how hard it was to be the new girl when the other girls had sleepovers to which I wasn't invited and the other boys were mean and spit in the water fountain. A few days later I wrote the boy back, Sorry it's taken me so long to answer. OK. I'll be your girlfriend. He walked me home, showing me the shortcut through the woods, the "umbrella graveyard" where kids abandoned anything they were too ashamed to carry to school-out-of-date lunchboxes, shirts and coats no longer in style. Umbrellas which, he explained, were really uncool, no matter what. Sometimes a girl would change shoes on the path, leaving the ugly ones she had to wear at home hanging from their laces on a tree branch. The fat boy huffed and puffed up the tiniest inclines. I did too because it was fall and that's when my asthma flared up because I was allergic to the changing seasons. One time my nose started to bleed and, because I didn't have any tissues, the fat boy gave me his science worksheet, then a big maple leaf, to catch the blood. So what if he couldn't dance? That was love.

–Denise Duhamel, Hollywood, FL

through me when I first heard it was banned, but now I wear it as a badge of honor and in banned writers.

KH: The first time we met was in a class in Iowa City ten years ago. You teach at Florida a low-residency MFA program at Converse College in South Carolina as well as summer workshops around the country. doesn't?

are the three main reasons July, and August. think that teaching gives me more free writing time than other occupations. I also like teaching because I am -Denise Duhamel, Hollywood, FL constantly getting to talk about writing and books I love. I have been teaching (gulp) since 1985.

My kindergarten boyfriend solidarity with all the other said his mother had taught him to waltz, so I told my mother about how he'd taught me, how we glided around the schoolyard during recess. How all the other kids dropped their balls and abandoned their jump ropes to watch us. International University and in My mother said, Really? like she didn't believe me, which made me angry even though my story was totally untrue. I liked to color with the boy. who was quiet like I was. One day, after biting into a cracker, he spat out his front tooth which looked like a tiny ice cube give you as a writer that working on the pad of his finger. The teacher in Atlantic City. Duhumel has something to as an insurance agent or a nurse made a fuss and wrapped his tooth in tissue. During naptime, he slept on a plastic mat by my side. I stayed awake trying to will him to give the tooth to me, but when I asked him his plans, he told me to become a teacher? June, he was going to take it home to put under his pillow. I do I flung puzzle pieces and started to cry. Even then, my expectations were too high.

KH: Yes, agree. Teaching gave me permission talk to poetry and buy books which Ι did, both, in copious mounts. ls there a different dynamic between teaching a workshop versus teaching regular class?

DD: Students are much more vulnerable in a workshop than a regular class. Poetry invites students to write about their feelings more than they might do in prose. Students sometimes reveal more about themselves than they realize they are revealing and then feel embarrassed. It's much harder to grade a poem than an essay. It's much harder to critique creative work. Still, I am comfortable now doing workshops. I enjoy sitting in a circle with people rather than standing in front of a classroom with a piece of chalk.

KH: When I was teaching, some days I'd have rather graded an essay. At least there were specific criteria for an essay. But there was something about creative work that I enjoyed. I think I just loved teaching poetry. I'm trying to imagine you with a piece of chalk in your hand! So many of your poems use humor or irony. Were you always funny? You say you started writing fiction. Was your fiction filled with humor, too?

DD: I think I became funny by mistake. I tended to be melodramatic and gloom and doom when I was younger and people laughed at me. So I hammed it up, I guess, and at some point tried to be funny with a purpose. Yes, I did try to write funny fiction.

KH: You've recently published a collaboration with Amy Lemmon called ABBA the Poems. (Coconut Books, 2010. www.coconutbooks. situation org) According to your process notes, the poems use an ABBA rhyme scheme in eight a new generation and cultural norms, quatrains, and must include a reference to the and the way they buck against those musical group ABBA. Amazing! And what norms is fascinating to me. I love the

You add fun! that the poems were written via If my current project doesn't adulthood. email, one line at a time. How work out, I can always KH: Interesting long did each poem take to write another poem about that write? How did my failure. you revise?

DD: I think

our project took over two years. The writing fiction again? poems with additional constraints (like palindromes or all "o" sounding endings) took quite a while. We were slow and methodical actually. Amy was moreso than I was. We were able to "keep" most of the poems we wrote.

KH: I know poets read other poets and reading is essential for lots of good reasons. But when you're not reading other poets, what kinds of books do you like? Mystery? Romance? Literary fiction?

DD: I really love young adult chapbook projects to keep me going until novels. Francesca Lia Block, Peter Johnson, Lisa Glatt, Ron Koertge, and David Hernandez are among my favorite found on sale for a penny a piece in a craft YA novelists. Teenagers, I think, feel more store. Each poem has the title "HELP" characters. Each teenager encounters word help (in English) at least once. The and Anne Sexton".

bridge between

DD: Yes! In Ka-ching! I have a long poem called "Lucky Me" about my rejection in the fiction world, so I'm a little superstitious to say I'm working on anything. If my current project doesn't work out, I can always write another poem

KH: When can readers expect your next

DD: I'm not sure. Maybe 2013? I have my then. One is called Help in 47 Languages, and the prose poems all fit into frames I about my failure.

book?

childhood and that some of authors (Glatt, Koertge, Hernandez) are also poets. Do you think about inspiration was from a rumor that when the famous linguist William Jacobsen was struck by a car, he shouted, "Help!" in 47 languages.

KH: As the author of numerous books and chapbooks of poetry on your own and in collaboration, do you have a favorite?

DD: No favorites. It's kind of like admitting you have a favorite kid.

KH: Once when I asked if you were bothered by critics' sometimes-tough comments, you said, if you believed the criticism, you must believe the praise. How hard is this to do?

DD: It is hard not to want everyone to think you're doing great work. I just noticed I wrote that last sentence in the second person because it's easier to do so. So when I say "you," I mean "me." You can't be an artist and expect everyone to love your work and feel comfortable with it. You have to ruffle feathers. That's part of the job description. So a bad review is better than no review at all.

KH: Speaking of publications that ruffle a few feathers-if there were a National Enquirer headline about you, what would it say?

DD: "DNA Tests Prove Poet Denise and experience more in a novel than other from a different language and uses the Duhamel is the Love Child of Frank O'Hara

FRIENDS OF LORINE NIEDECKER

www.LorineNiedecker.org WISCONSIN'S POET OF PLACE

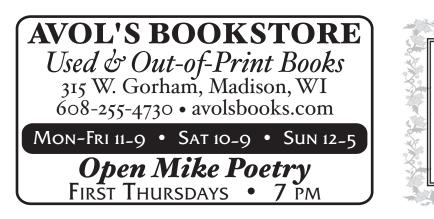

LOG ON FOR NEWSLETTERS,

NEWS, POETRY AND RESOURCES

OR CALL 920-563-7790

A CAR AND A

W.

It's the Meds

"I wish my hair was thick." "It's the meds," they say. "I wish my legs were thin." "It's the meds," they say. "I wish food tasted better." "It's the meds," they say "I wish I could lose weight." "It's the meds," they say.

"I wish you wouldn't complain so much," they say, "It's the meds," I say.

-IDELLA ANACKER, PORTAGE, WI

Tongue Piercing ~ 2

Mondays are the splinters you get licking an ice cream stick, trying to remove last remnants of chocolate.

-JAMES REITTER, SHEBOYGAN, WI

Fool the Bears

One way to protect your camp from bears is to take the piss bottle you keep in the tent to piss in (so you don't catch a chill going outside in below freezing temps) and empty it each day on trees nearby so eventually your tent is surrounded by a circle of your urine-but when you pour it on the trees pour it high as you can reach while walking in a circle around them so they're circled with your piss scent from eight feet up to where their trunks go into the ground. Why? That way the bear will think the creature that pissed must have a penis over eight feet off the ground and depart post-haste thinking a monster lives there.

-ANTLER, MILWAUKEE, WI

36 VERSE WISCONSIN #106 JULY 2011

Woman with a Guy and a Motorcycle across from Heather's Saturday Night

From a distance she looks good: short blonde hair, leathers, a comfortable stance. He stoops by the engine, adjusting something. That's me. two motorcycles and three Ford Mustangs ago before Vietnam, bankruptcy and divorce.

Now I walk my dog who's looking for a place to crap. I want a woman to hug me from behind as we roar into the warm summer night. Maybe stop for a few beers. Ignore the guy and his dog staring at us from down the street.

-JOHN LEHMAN, ROCKDALE, WI

taking over the fat corporate beast swaggers into the bar, kicks the skinny old bum offa his stool, wiggles his high end ass onto the seat & buys everyone a drink for himself.

-NORMAL, SAUGERTIES, NY

Hearing Perfectly

"You're missing all the high pitched, soft consonant sounds," the audiologist told me. "You mean women's voices?" "Well, yes I guess you could say that."

Isn't it odd, how men suffer this deafness?

We stare intently with sympathetic smiles watching their lips shower us in sentences half heard.

I've noticed that missing so much of what she tells me has deepened my affection for her.

Is this what they mean by making more out of less?

-CHARLES RIES, MILWAUKEE, WI

Contributors' Notes of Mo

Erum Ahmed is from Pakistan, currently traveling in Egypt. She has studied in Pakistan, the United States, and Germany, and published school books, articles on diverse subjects, and poetry and fiction mostly in the United States. Although she's visited many states in America, she has not yet visited Wisconsin. p. 4

Idella Anacker is a retired Preschool/Kindergarten teacher. Her book Show and Tell shares her experiences with four and five year olds for over twenty-five years. She enjoys writing children's stories as well as poetry and light verse. p. 37

Antler, former poet laureate of Milwaukee, is the author of Selected Poems, Ever-Expanding Wilderness, Deathrattles vs. Comecries, and Exclamation Points ad Infinitum His work appears in the recent anthologies Poets Against the War; Poetic Voices Without Borders 2; Best Gay Poetry 2008; Comeback Wolves: Welcoming the Wolf Home; and Wilderness Blessings. p. 4, 37

Christopher Austin is a previously unpublished writer living, working and writing in Milwaukee, where he lives with his wife, two children and two Labrador Retrievers. p. 28

Suzanne Bergen has lived in Wisconsin most of her life, born in the little town of Glenbeulah in the Northern Kettle Moraine. She fled to Massachusetts in midlfe for adventures and education, but returned to Wisconsin and Madison in the 1990s. p. 5

Gerald Bertsch grew up on the plains of South Dakota and attended a one-room school house for 6 years. His graduate studies in theology were done at Union Theological Seminary in New York City. His books of poetry include In This Land: Prairie, a poetic memoir of his childhood on the homestead in South Dakota, p. 32

Over the past few years, Amy Billone has had poems accepted by such journals as Abbey, Barbaric Yawp, Bellowing Ark, literary art book, and Small Brushes and Wavelength: Poems in Prose and Verse. Her book of literary criticism Little Songs: Women, Silence and the Nineteenth-Century Sonnet was published with The Ohio State University Press in April, 2007. p. 5

David Blackey is a mostly retired attorney recently elected to the board of the ACLU-WI. He's a volunteer naturalist with the Myrick Hixon Eco-Park, and a recent grandfather of two lovely girls, Isabella and Lucia. Previous work was included in Verse Wisconsin, Steam Ticket, Forward and the 2011 Wisconsin Poets' Calendar. p. 4

John L. Campbell started freelance writing for business and trade magazines in 1995. His book, Writing in Retirement, explains his evolution into fiction and poetry along with the profiles of thirteen other writers-in-retirement. His latest poetry chapbook is entitled Backstreet Voyeur. p. 15

Antonia Clark works for a medical software company in Burlington, Vermont, and is co-administrator of an online poetry workshop, The Waters. Recent poems have appeared in The 2River View, Anderbo, Apparatus Magazine, The Cortland Review, Soundzine, Umbrella, and elsewhere. She's been to Wisconsin only once-to Madison-and can't wait to return. p. 17, 24

Cathryn Cofell serves on the Advisory Board of Verse Wisconsin. She writes, too; moreso in the past with five published chapbooks and a CD that combines her work with the music of Obvious Dog. She has lived in Wisconsin for all but three years when she tried to love and live in Colorado, both heinous mistakes now rectified. p. 16.30

Barb Cranford was an assistant editor at Britannica Junior, a poet, a sculptor and a gallery owner in Chicago. She has seven books and a Pushcart nomination, holds poetry workshops in her home in the woods, and writes poems when she feels like it. p. 7. 14. 32

CX Dillhunt was born in Green Bay and grew up in De Pere in a big house on the Fox River as one of twelve children. Currently he's an assistant editor for Hummingbird: Magazine of the Short Poem, and he served as co-editor of the Wisconsin Poets' Calendar: 2006. He teaches elementary school writer's workshops and is the lead instructor for Elderhostel's The Writer in You at Green Lake. p. 28,29

Denise Duhamel's most recent poetry titles are Ka-Ching! (University of Pittsburgh Press, 2009), Two and Two (Pittsburgh, 2005), Mille et un Sentiments (Firewheel, 2005) and Queen for a Day: Selected and New Poems (Pittsburgh, 2001). A recipient of a National Endowment for the Arts fellowship, she is an associate professor at Florida International University in Miami. pp. 34-36

P. R. Dyjak is an Assistant Professor of English at the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point, where she teaches creative writing, poetry, and composition. She lives with her puppy, Zoë, who is an Australian Shepherd/Border Collie, and two kittens, Flora and Chianna. A long time ago she lived in Madison, with her dogs Molly and Jasmine. p. 24

R. Virgil (Ron) Ellis lives near Cambridge, Wisconsin, where he and his wife are busy restoring fifty acres of wetland and savanna. He is an Emeritus Professor who taught writing, literature and media at the University of Wisconsin-Whitewater. For an exploration of his work see www.poetrvellis.com. p. 27

Thomas J. Erickson is an attorney in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. His chapbook, The Lawyer Who Died in the Courthouse Bathroom, will be published by Parallel Press in 2013. p. 16 23

Casey Francis is currently pursuing a graduate degree in English at New Mexico Highlands University, but will always be a Nebraskan at heart. He has published Mining View and Ward and America and blogged for the Center for Rural Affairs on their Blog for Rural America (www.cfra.org/blog). p. 13 Jim Giese has left Wisconsin numerous times for short-term jobs only to be drawn back to the state's natural beauty. When he needs inspiration or recuperation he heads to the woods and fields with his two labs. p. 4

Sara Greenslit works as a small animal veterinarian in Madison. She earned an MFA from Penn State and a DVM from the UW. FC2 is publishing her second novel in 2011, As if a Bird Flew By Me. Her first novel came out from Starcherone, The Blue of Her Body. p. 26

David Graham has taught writing and literature at Ripon College in Ripon WI since 1987. He is the author of six collections of poems, most recently Stutter Monk (Flume Press), and an essay anthology co-edited with Kate Sontag, After Confession: Poetry as Autobiography (Graywolf Press). pp. 6-8

John Grey has been published recently in the Talking River, South Carolina Review and Karamu with work upcoming in Prism International, Poem and the Evansville Review. p. 24

Kenneth P. Gurney lives in Albuquerque with his beloved Dianne. For Kenneth's full bio, publication notes and available books please visit http://www.kpgurney.me/ Poet/Welcome.html. p. 13, 15

Richard Hedderman's poems have appeared in South Dakota Review, CutBank, Eclipse, and elsewhere. His chapbook, The Discovery of Heaven was published by Parallel Press in 2006. He is the Senior Educator at the Milwaukee Public Museum and a Lecturer in Theatre at UW-Milwaukee. p. 23

Charles Hughes retired recently from the law firm where he worked for many years. His poems have appeared or are forthcoming in Measure, Sewanee Theological Review, Iron Horse Literary Review, America, and the 2010 poetry anthology of the Georgia Poetry Society, The Reach of Song. He lives in the Chicago area with his wife. They and their sons have enjoyed many family vacations in the Hayward area. p. 9

Karla Huston is the author of six chapbooks of poetry, most recently, An Inventory of Lost Things (Centennial Press, 2009). Her poems, reviews and interviews have been published widely. Her poem "Theory of Lipstick," originally published in Verse Wisconsin #101, was awarded a Pushcart Prize. pp. 34-36

Clint Jensen is a junior at UW-Madison majoring in English and Journalism. He has lived in Tomah, Wisconsin for his entire life. p. 33

Henk Joubert moved to Wisconsin in 1998 from southern Africa, and has been living in the greater Milwaukee area since then. He switched over to writing English poetry from his native language four years ago. He needs to write to get his creative fix. p. 33

Claire Keyes is the author of two poetry collections: The Question of Rapture and Rising and Falling. Her poems and reviews have appeared in Tattoo Highway, Prairie Schooner and The Newport Review, among others. Although a resident of Marblehead, MA, she took a memorable drive through lake-filled Wisconsin in the first car she ever owned. p. 5

Michael Kriesel is a poetry reviewer for Small Press Review and his reviews have appeared in Library Journal. He has won both the WFOP Muse Prize and the Lorine Niedecker Award from the Council for Wisconsin Writers. He's been nominated for nine Pushcart Prizes. Books include Chasing Saturday Night (Marsh River Editions); Feeding My Heart To The Wind and Moths Mail The House (sunnyoutside press); and Soul Noir (Platonic 3way Press). pp. 18-19

Jackie Langetieg has three books of poems: White Shoulders (Cross+Roads Press), Just What in Hell is a Stage of Grief, and Confetti in a Silent City (Ghost Horse Press). She is a member of the Wisconsin Fellowship of Poets and regular contributor to the annual calendar. p. 17

Estella Lauter is Professor Emerita at UW-Oshkosh and lives in the Door Peninsula. Her first chapbook, Pressing a Life Together By Hand (2007) appeared in the New Women's Voices series from Finishing Line Press, and was nominated for two Pushcart prizes. The Essential Rudder: North Channel Poems was released by FLP in 2008. Her poem "Gaza, January 2009" tied for first prize in the 2009 Barbara Mandigo Kelly Peace Poetry Contest; it appears on www.wagingpeace.org. p. 28, 30

John Lehman is the founder of Rosebud magazine and the poetry editor of Wisconsin People & Ideas. p. 12, 15, 16, 32, 37

Quincy R. Lehr's poetry and criticism have appeared in numerous journals and e-zines in the U.S., UK, Ireland, Australia, and the Czech Republic. His first book, Across the Grid of Streets, appeared in 2008, and his second, Obscure Classics of English Progressive Rock, will appear soon. He lives in Brooklyn, where he teaches history. He once got unbelievably drunk in Madison, Wisconsin. p. 10

Though David Lurie grew up on the East Coast, he moved to the Midwest after graduating from Binghamton University in 2008, and he's spent the last three years bouncing between Milwaukee and Chicago. Since earning his B.A., he's taught in two different high-need Milwaukee Public Schools, worked as a test prep teacher for wealthy Chicagoans, and sold fitness equipment and snow throwers, all while writing poetry and making plans for Ph.D. programs. p. 12

Amit Majmudar's first book, 0°,0° [Zero Degrees, Zero Degrees], (Northwestern James Reitter was born in Germany, but grew up in lower NY. He earned his BA in Creative Writing from SUNY Oswego, his MFA in Poetry from CUNY Brooklyn, University Press/TriQuarterly Books, 2009) was a finalist for the Norma Farber First Book Award. His second manuscript, Heaven and Earth, won the 2011 Donald Justice and his Ph.D. in Folklore at the University of Louisiana at Lafayette. He's spent the Award. His first novella, Azazil, was serialized recently in The Kenyon Review over past four years as an Assistant Professor of English for UW-Sheboygan and lives in three issues. His first novel, Partitions, was published by Henry Holt/Metropolitan in Sheboygan with his fiancée, two cats, and a bearded dragon. p. 29, 3 2011. His poetry has been featured on Poetry Daily several times and has appeared in Poetry Magazine and The Best American Poetry 2007. pp. 20-21 Harlan Richards grew up on the west side of Madison and came late to his penchant

Jesse Manser grew up in Middleton, attended UW-Milwaukee, and recently graduated with a degree in Journalism. He continues to work, write and live on the city's eastside and is grateful and honored to have his poetry published in Verse Wisconsin. Other work of his can be found at the Shepherd Express online poetry column and in Fox Cry Review. p. 25, 26

Wisconsin has always been special to Linda Back McKay. When she was little, there were all those glorious summers at Uncle Albert's farm in Chippewa Falls. Now it's riding a red (the color of roses and fine cabernets) Harley-Davidson along the river through Stockholm, Maiden Rock and Pepin. She is author of several poetry collections and the groundbreaking book, Shadow Mothers: Stories of Adoption and Reunion, which was inspiration for the play, Watermelon Hill, which has been produced by professional theater. p. 12, 17

Rick McMonagle was born and raised in Pittsburgh, PA. His parents honeymooned at Lake Geneva. He lived in the country outside of River Falls, WI from 1996 to 2008. His poetry lineage includes a Calabrian great-uncle who fell in love, left the Joint Haug, emigrated to NYC and wrote poems; his first poetry teacher at Penn State, John Haag, who was a student of Theodore Roethke; and Allen Ginsberg and Anne Waldman at Naropa Institute, p. 14

Mary Mercier, a native of Milwaukee, now lives 77 miles east of that Cream City, with her husband and two wily cats. Her poetry has appeared in Free Verse, Fuse, Connotations, and Wild Earth. She is the author of one chapbook, Small Acts (Parallel Press). In 2005 her poem "Snow Geese" was included as a component of Martha Glowacki's exhibition, Starry Transit, staged at the University of Wisconsin's Washburn Observatory. p. 31

Richard Merelman writes poems because language is the only medium through which he can hope to achieve beautiful expression. Poems of his have appeared in Main Street Rag and Measure. Recent poems have appear in Bumble Jacket Miscellany and Verse Wisconsin. He taught political science at the University of Wisconsin-Madison until 2001. p. 14

Richard W. Moyer is 80 years old. He obtained his AB in English at Harvard College Judith Sepsey began writing when she retired about ten years ago. She has been published in The Milwaukee Journal Sentinel, Echoes, Free Verse, and elsewhere. p. 33 in 1953; his MH from University of Richmond in 1976; and an MA in English from Temple University in 2000. His poems are widely published, and he has one chapbook and one book of selected poems to his credit. p. 32 normal began writing and reciting poetry in Greenwich Village circa 1962-64. Since then he has lived in 47 places and held almost as many jobs, the past thirty years he's been a nurse. He's been widely published in mostly underground poetry rags, and has two chapbooks from Lummox Press. p. 37

Maurice Oliver's poetry has appeared in numerous national and international publications and literary websites including Potomac Journal, Pebble Lake Review, and Frigg. His fourth chapbook was One Remedy Is Travel (Origami Condom, 2007). He edits the literary ezine Concelebratory Shoehorn Review at http://cshoe.blogspot.com. p. 22

Helen Padway lives, writes and laughs in Wisconsin. She is part of the Sparks and the Hartford Avenue Poets. Her poems have been published in a variety of print publications and most recently in the ezines Newversenews and Your Daily Poem. She is young enough to think that poetry can change the world. p. 15

Nancy Petulla is a retired minister who lives in a 150-year-old farmhouse. She has lived there for 34 years, p. 33

Charles Portolano started writing poetry 14 years ago to celebrate the birth of his daring, darling daughter Valerie, and to preserve the memories. Valerie was born with many obstacles to overcome. Writing soon became his way of saving his sanity. Valerie is doing great now; she is quite the young writer. p. 23

Ester Hauser Laurence Prudlo is a UW alumna who has lived away from the state for some 28 years, but who returned two years ago for summers in the Madison area. She is the author of three children's books and has published a few poems. She taught creative writing courses for UWX in the 70's. A retired counselor to soldiers and inmates, she is mother of 4 and grandmother of 4, and she lives with her husband, Tony. p. 26, 27

Casey Quinn has had two poetry chapbooks published Snapshots of Life by Salvatore Publishing and Prepare to Crash by Big Table Publishing. His third poetry chapbook Marie Sheppard Williams's mentor for poetry is Thomas R. Smith, a WI poet will be released in 2011 by Epic Rites Press. In his free time he edits the online and essayist. She has had poems published in The Sun, Poetry East, Ted Kooser's magazine Short Story Library at http://shortstory.us.com. p. 24 newspaper column, and another issue of Verse Wisconsin. She has published seven story collections, and has won the Pushcart Prize twice. p. 10

Christine Redman-Waldeyer, founder and editor of a new women's literary journal Adanna, holds a Doctorate of Letters from Drew University. She teaches literature, Marilyn Windau was nurtured on Big Bend farms, in raspberry patches in Fremont, by blue gills from Green Lake and on books in Madison. Graduating from UWwriting, and journalism at Passaic County Community College and is the Coordinator of the Journalism Program. She is the author of two books of poetry with Muse-Pie Madison, she married a civil engineer from Wauwatosa and raised three daughters Press, Frame by Frame (2007) and Gravel (2009) and is published in literary journals in Appleton and Sheboygan Falls. She teaches art to elementary school children in including Caduceus Journal, Connections Magazine, Exit 13, and The Texas Review. p. 9 Oostburg. p. 31 for poetry, having not begun to write until his mid-50s. He has had poems accepted by Love's Change Magazine, Shepherd, Samsara and Italian-Americana. He is currently living in Wisconsin's Belly of the Beast. p. 12

Charles P. Ries's narrative poems, short stories, interviews, and reviews have appeared in over two hundred print and electronic publications. He has received four Pushcart Prize nominations. He is a founding member of the Lake Shore Surf Club, the oldest freshwater surfing club on the Great Lakes. Most recently he was interviewed by Jane Crown for Blog Radio (www.janecrown.com-click on archived shows at the bottom of the page). Visit www.literati.net/Ries/. p. 37

Marybeth Rua-Larsen's poetry has been published or is forthcoming in: The Raintown Review, Measure, The Barefoot Muse, The Concho River Review and The Worcester Review, among others. She has only the most tentative connections to Wisconsin: a talented former student of hers moved to Wisconsin after graduation ... and loved it. p. 10, 22

Chuck Rybak is a professor of creative writing and literature at UW-Green Bay. He is the author of three collections of poetry, the most recent being Tongue and Groove, which was published by Main Street Rag. Chuck lives in Green Bay with his wife and two daughters. p. 7

Jane Satterfield's most recent book, Daughters of Empire: A Memoir of a Year in Britain and Beyond, appeared from Demeter Press in 2009. Her second collection, Assignation at Vanishing Point, received the 2003 Elixir Press Poetry Prize. She received an NEA Fellowship in Literature and three Maryland State Arts Council grants in poetry. She hasn't traveled to Wisconsin (yet) but was deeply flattered when a barista at the University of Iowa who hailed from Madison admired her "Boston" accent! p. 27

G. A. Scheinoha thought about becoming a private detective, later, a bounty hunter. He never imagined he'd follow in his father's tracks; a series of blue collar jobs. Where their lives differed was instead of marriage and family, he wrote a million words over thirty years, some of which have recently appeared in Avocet, Bellowing Ark, Bracelet Charm, Echoes, Floyd County Moonshine and Verse Wisconsin. p. 29

John H. Sime lives in the Kickapoo Valley of Western Wisconsin where he operates a funeral home. He has written poetry since service in the U.S. Peace Corps as an English teacher in Bamako, Mali. He has contributed to Kickapoo Free Press, Hummingbird, The Epitaph-News, and The American Funeral Director. p. 17

Kate Sontag's recent work appears in Prairie Schooner, Seattle Review, Verse Wisconsin, and EXPRESSmilwaukee.com. Her work has been featured in Valparaiso Poetry Review and appeared in anthologies such as Boomer Girls, Are You Experienced?, and Sweeping Beauty (U. of Iowa). She is co-editor of After Confession: Poetry as Autobiography (Graywolf) and teaches at Ripon College. p. 31

Known mainly as a poet/teacher, Barry Spacks has brought out various novels, stories, three poetry-reading CDs, and ten poetry collections while teaching literature and writing at M.I.T. & UC Santa Barbara. His most recent book of poems, Food for the Journey, appeared from Cherry Grove in August, 2008. Over the years his poetry has appeared in The New Yorker, Harper's, Atlantic Monthly, Paris Review and hundreds of other journals, p. 11

Marc Swan lives on Munjoy Hill in Portland, Maine. His work has been published in Exquisite Corpse, Rattle, Slipstream, and Westerly, among others. Simple Distraction, a collection of his poems from 1989 to 2009, was published in fall 2009 by talllighthouse in London England. p. 25

Richard Swanson lives in Madison, Wisconsin where he reads, gardens, and writes. His previous volume was Men in the Nude in Socks (Fireweed, 2006). His newest collection, Not Quite Eden, was also published by Fireweed in 2010. p. 26

Timothy Walsh's awards include the Grand Prize in the Atlanta Review International Poetry Competition and the Kurt Vonnegut Fiction Prize from North American Review. He authored a book of literary criticism, The Dark Matter of Words: Absence, Unknowing, and Emptiness in Literature and two chapbooks, Wild Apples (Parallel) and Blue Lace Colander (Marsh River). He is an Assistant Dean at UW-Madison. p. 25

PRSRT STD US POSTAGE PAID MADISON WI PERMIT NO. 549

Yerse Wisconsin P. O. Box 620216 Middleton, WI 53562-0216

Is this your last issue of Verse your last issue of Verse Wisconsin? Check your mailing Wisconsin? Check your meed to "106" you need to "106" you need to subscriber form label! If it says label! If it says the subscriber form on page 2.

VERSE WISCONSIN

JULY 2011

More Verse Wisconsin Online

"LUCK OF THE DRAW" POEMS, GUEST EDITED BY SHOSHAUNA SHY, POETRY JUMPS OFF THE SHELF

Jessica Nelson North: Recalling The Reaches Of Silence And Sound, by LaMoine MacLaughlin

Why Being an Obscure Poet Isn't Such a Bad Life After All, plus Ten Ways of Knowing Your Poetic Sun is Setting, by Charles P. Ries

FOUR MUSICPOEMS, BY RON RIEKKI & DAN WRZESINSKI

POETIC JUSTICE, A REVIEW-ESSAY, BY WENDY VARDAMAN

plus book reviews, audio by print & online contributors, & Wisconsin Poetry News

COMING IN NOVEMBER

"EARTHWORKS" POETRY AT VW ONLINE INTERVIEW WITH KIMBERLY BLAESER ANN FISHER-WIRTH ON ECOPOETRY PATRICIA MONAGHAN ON BLACK EARTH INSTITUTE JEFF PONIEWASZ ON ECOLITERATURE WHAT EDITORS WANT, BY CHARLES P. RIES

Poetry Online By

F.J. Bergmann Shirley Brewer Carol Carpenter Martha Christina Ian Chronister Barbara Crooker Heidi Kristine Czerwiec Julie Damerell Max Garland James Gurley Lois Marie Harrod John Johnson Kit Kennedy Peg Lauber Lyn Lifshin Dawn Lonsinger Alison Luterman Janet McCann Ken Pobo Margaret Rozga Hal Sirowitz Sandy Stark Jeanie Tomasko Theresa Welford

Reading Sept 1-Oct15 for the March online theme, "Masks & Monologues."

MISSION STATEMENT

Verse Wisconsin publishes poetry and serves the community of poets in Wisconsin and beyond. In fulfilling our mission we:

- showcase the excellence and diversity of poetry rooted in or related to Wisconsin
- connect Wisconsin's poets to each other and to the larger literary world
- foster critical conversations about poetry
- build and invigorate the audience for poetry

leatures versewisconsin.org